Bright finished, lustrous cloths, headed by broadcloths, are decidedly the high favorites. These are shown in an unusually wide range of novelty colors, and the appearance presented is very attractive. The way taken of showing these goods in the large stores is worth copying. The usual method is to unwrap say two yards or so from the end, open it out full width and drape it over the piece of goods, allowing the unwrapped end to hang down. Shadings of a color or colors that blend are stood up on the counter or table. Space is left on the counters for selling and showing goods. Salesmen usually take their stand outside the counter, where they are ready to answer customers' questions, or to put in a word as to the goods, etc., going behind the counter to show other stock or complete sales. These counter displays should be very carefully covered at night, and frequently changed. All kinds of dress materials are shown and sold effectively in this manner in the leading stores. Where the stock carried is large enough to admit of shaded groups, the effect is very striking.

Besides plain, fancy broadcloths take a prominent position. Dull, indistinct stripes are the ultra style, but block checks and plaids are also shown. As aforesaid, there is a decided preponderance of plain goods over fancies shown, chiefly in piece-dyed worsted fabrics, such as poplins, fine serges, prunellas, etc.

There is only a limited representation given to cloths with rougher finishes—to cheviots, rough serges, chevron weaves, etc. These, however, are prominently placed, as they indicate the newer tendency—the one that points the way along which the season is expected to develop. Ultra novelties generally shown in dress lengths, consist of the use of velvet or chenille figures upon plain cloths. These are in bordered goods, or in striped and dotted patterns.

The fancies shown are very much in the nature of men's cloths, only away from gray to a great extent. They are rich in coloring, and very subdued and unobtrusive in effect. Stripes are looked upon as the leading style, but block checks and fancy plaids will also score.

Tartans, not only in the darker clan patterns, but in those that show fair quantities of bright color, are selling freely, for misses' and children's wear.

The novelty color and the one most talked of, is the evique, or ecclesiastical purple, ranging from deep purple to soft lavender tones. Another coming shade is peacock. The running of these purple shades was somewhat of a surprise, but peacock has been coming into prominence for some time now. At the horse shows and at the Spring race meetings, several striking gowns of this color were seen, and The Review then predicted that more would be heard of it later. Just what will be the leading color is a matter for question. Brown shades are certain to be very prominent. They have been immensely popular since the early days of 1907, in New York and other cities over the line. They have not, as yet, had any particular run in Canada, though in the past few months their vogue has been growing. The range of shades is a big one, running from deep bronze browns, through copper and golden browns, down to tans and the darker leathers. Blue is a certain seller, and promises to grow stronger as the season advances. Green is coming to the front, particularly in the rich, deep, clear tones. Soft, rich shades of red are good, both in the garnet and the Burgandy order.

Black materials are steadily gaining ground, particularly in soft silk and wool fabrics, and in voiles, etc.

Lightweight materials are still the vogue, and there seems to be no possibility of a change. Many weaves are of firmer texture, but there is no advance in weight.

Wash Goods for Spring

Ginghams have finished the present season in high favor. More of them could have been easily sold had supplies been available. Mills making ginghams and zephyr fabrics have had a big run, and have not been able to supply the demand made upon them. Block checks have been the big sellers this Summer, and promise to continue their vogue in 1908. As stripes are high style in fancy fabrics for the coming Spring, stripe patterns will lead in ginghams. Checks and plaids, however, will be in high favor.

Floral patterns, in printed fabrics, are losing their hold, and neat patterns, particularly coin spots, polka dots and ring patterns, will be great favorites.

Spring, 1908, will again open a big selling season for sheer white fabrics—for lawns, batistes, linens, mulls, etc. In sheer white fancies, stripe effects lead, but checks and dots are sure of a good representation.

Lightweight mercerized goods promise to be bigger sellers than for some seasons past. Poplins, lightweight reps, crepes, and panama grounds, with heavy line stripes, line checks and plaids, group dots, swivels, etc., are those selling. Soft-finished lightweight fancy piques promise well, for tailored suits and separate skirts.

Silks and Velvets

Silk fabrics promise to be bigger sellers than usual, in the Fall season, as they have a much higher standing from a fashion point of view than they generally have at this time of the year. Big orders have been placed for plaid, stripe, and novelty silks, for the making of jumper suits, and for waists, etc. Another development that will help the sale of fancy silks is their promised use for trimming purposes.

Silk fabrics will be largely used in the making up of evening gowns. Bright satin finishes are most in vogue, but softer, heavier, weaves, failles, Bengalines, etc., are now being used by Parisian dressmakers.

Taffetas lead from a yardage standpoint, the soft, bright, chiffon weaves being heavy sellers. Waists, suits, dress foundations, underskirts and the many trimming uses, account for the heavy consumption of this silk. Plain and shot taffetas are being freely used for millinery purposes.

In high-class fabrics, marquisettes, silk voiles, chiffon cloths and nets are big sellers. The novelty here is the use of satin and velvet stripes, and the coin spots, dot and ring patterns. These are usually self-color effects.

A very big velvet and velveteen season is indicated, the leaning being toward plain weaves. The millinery trade will account for a large portion of the velvet sold, but velvet and velveteen will be used in the developing of outer wraps, suits and costumes, as well as for trimming purposes. There will be some interest in fancy velvets, shots and terry, or uncut velvet, being used. Some stripe and paid novelties are showing also.

Mohairs

Mohairs and lusters have always a sale in the Summer season, for certain special uses. This Summer, not only in Europe, but in the States, they have been gaining ground in the higher-priced lines. Fine chiffon weaves and bright Sicilians have been used by high-class dressmakers, for making up into gowns, suits and wraps. Not all the cloths so seen are of plain weave, but monotone, shadow effects, etc., are also used. This month's cover design shows an early Fall wrap developed in mohair.

THE "PIRLE" FINISH

"Indispensable for the Open-Air Girl."

"Lady's Realm" says:

"The out-door girl who loves to cycle, walk and drive, wil never wear anything but a 'PIRLE' costume when she has once donned one. It may be the shower of May or the storm of November, her neat cloth dress will remain unspotted and unshrunk, and, when dry, will be as fresh as when it came from the tailors' hands."

"IN FASHION'S WHIRL."

"Madge," in "Truth," says:

"Every dressmaker ought to leave out a bit of selvedge somewhere with the 'PIRLE' stamp on it, as this affords an absolute guarantee for the wearer. The proprietors undertake to make good any material so stamped that has been actually damaged by rain."

DRESS ACCESSORIES

Neckwear

Season Opening Now in Splendid Shape—Ruchings Ordered Out—Coat Sets and Collar and Cuff Sets the Novelty.

The season has opened up in splendid shape in the neckwear section. Orders are exceptionally heavy, showing that the trade has every confidence in the selling power of this line. Ladies' neckwear is strictly a novelty line, and manufacturers are always on the hunt for new ideas and tendencies. This year they are especially keen, as they wish to keep business up to opening form.

In judging of the trend of styles on the Canadian market, an idea of what is doing in fashion centres is of high value. The majority of the new French models have decidedly higher collar bands of transparent mousseline, finished in front with a soft rosette or tie of lace or lingerie, or with a cascaded Beau Brummel jabot of lace, or pleated mousseline attached to the band by a smart little bow of silk or velvet. Though the collars are exaggeratedly high, they are very cleverly cut, so as to be quite comfortable. Bones on the back and sides, keep the collar in place, while two bones under the chin, keep the material from creasing. There is often a narrow edge of silk to finish the collar. The perfect fit of the French collars make them noticeable, for though they are very high they are easy to wear.

In the New York market, fashion authorities are still declaring in favor of stiff-starched linen collars. The only difference between the Fall and the Spring styles, is in the class of embroideries used.

Soft turn-downs, with stiff bands, are showing, and to wear with both the stiff and the soft turn-downs are various bows, ties, Windsors, aad the Beau Brummel jabots.

As to the vogue of stiff turn-down linen collars in Canada, opinions are divided. It is certain that, particularly in the large centres, some interest will be manifested in them this fall. As to any extensive sale, opinions differ. Those on the subject, as expressed to The Review, range from extremely good, good, fair, to no good at all.

It should be remembered that the neckwear business in Canada is in the hands of the home firms. They send buyers and designers over to Paris, and are in constant touch with New York. Also being Canadian firms, and catering only for the Canadian market, the modifications and models they produce are individual and Canadian to a greater extent than in many lines. Therefore, it does not follow that any style that attains a high vogue in neckwear in the States, will be equally successful here. Paris is the big style creator, and though New York styles have a big influence on this market, it is the Canadian adaptations that are suited to the trade and that sell in the Dominion.

Meanwhile, the staple stocks—dainty soft effects in chiffon, silk, lace, etc.—are selling freely. The trade has full confidence in them, and orders are so large that the neckwear firms are exceedingly busy. Ruchings promise to repeat the success of the past few seasons. Orders already in hand total up to an immense yardage ; in fact, firms making frillings could not hope to handle the business this Fall had they not utilized between seasons in making preparations for the rush time. A city development noted, is the wearing of colored ruching with a white waist. Where other accessories are of a color, say pink or blue, the neck frilling will match. Travelers are reporting an interest in the tourist frillings. These are developed in pleated lawn. They are shown this Spring, but were only fairly successful. Now the trade is asking for them.

Shown by Rhys D. Fairbairn.

Collar and cuff sets, and coat sets, promise to be a big factor. This is to be a strictly tailored season of great simplicity of outline. Already women are beginning to feel the need of some relief from the severity of outline, and the somberness of color, and collar and cuff sets, and coat sets, are selling for this purpose.

The latest collar and cuff set has the yoke effect with the high neck attached. Coat sets are either of lace or embroidered linen or poplin. The lace collar shown last month in The Review is the selling shape.

Lace

Filet is the Feature—Brussels Laces Good—Metal Laces the High Novelty.

Judging from the size of orders placed and from the fashion tendencies, an extra good lace season is expected. Not only has heavy buying been the rule, but a very much higher class of laces has been taken. Buying has covered a wide range, and there will be plenty of choice when Fall novelties are shown.

The new feature, undoubtedly, is the filet vogue. This effect is most often seen in combination, as filet motifs enter into almost every pattern, and there is hardly a lace seen but a portion of its pattern is in filet effect. Filet will be the leading feature of the season on the American market this Fall, but probably the full force of its vogue will not be felt in Canada until the Spring season opens up. Filet antique is selling to the better trade, but prices have already climbed so high that there is little hope for it as a popular lace.

Prices are also somewhat higher on St. Gall and Plauen goods, that will, as usual, form the staples of the season. Nets have done well, but fashion is fostering the heavier makes and Venise and Venise combinations are especially good.

The so-called metal laces are the ultra novelty. These are really embroderies of colored silks and metal threads upon filet grounds. The colors are Japanese in effect, but patterns are antique or mediaeval in design. Sometimes the net ground is of metal threads. These laces will be used upon handsome gowns, and high-class millinery.

Brussels laces are very fashionable, and have sold well. Bruges and Princesse laces promise to be the chief evening laces of the season.

Medallions and bands in all laces promise to be free sellers, and buyers have placed larger orders than ever before for all-overs. As a matter of fact, if a particular all-over is purchased, one or more widths of bands and medallions to match will be asked for.

Considerably more interest, than was anticipated earlier, is manifested in black laces. Stocks of these are not large, and already enquiries are being received for narrow Valenciennes and Chantillys. Embroidered filets, the pattern worked with artificial silk, are the novelty in black laces. These are shown in all-overs and bands.

Ribbons

Conditions for Spring, 1908—The Retail Situation—Good Fall Trade Expected.

During the Summer months trade in ribbons has been fairly satisfactory. Retail merchants state that the amount of business done was surprisingly large, considering the season. Ribbons of every description were in demand, but fancy designs were in particular request.

To date, the Fall trade has been brisk, too, seemingly a continuance of the Summer's activity. As might be expected, there was a harvest at the time of the millinery and dress goods openings, particularly on the former occasion. Demand for various lines, known as staples, is wel maintained.

At present most travelers are out on sorting trips. Stocks of holiday ribbons are being laid in by merchants on every side, a good season being anticipated.

In the large wholesale ribbon houses the feeling is that trade has been satisfactory. At present shipments of orders placed earlier in the season are being made.

When writing to advertisers kindly mention having seen their advertisement in this paper.

Among favorite lines, taffetas continue to hold first position, with a slight feeling for satin ribbons. Velvet lines also promise to be popular. These ribbons, while exceptionally scarce a few months ago, are now in good supply. Merchants wishing to fill in broken lines should take advantage at once and not put off ordering till again too late. Fancy ribbons, in Dresden effects for millinery purposes, continue good after an exceptionally fine Summer season.

The feeling as regards any one color in particular is not established. Reds, sky blues, blue, golden brown, tan, and rose are all popular colors.

Prices are still high, with no indication of a drop for some time. The market just at present is steady and firm.

The continental markets look forward to an exceptional demand for fancy ribbons.

Trimmings, Braids, Buttons

Well-trimmed Simplicity the Keynote of Fall Fashions—Japanese Bands and Embroideries High.

The Fall fashions have resolved themselves into simple styles and tailored garments. It is, however, in a way, a much-trimmed simplicity, and the braid, button and trimming counters should reap a good harvest. Quantities of braid are going to be used this Fall. Soutache, both in trimming effects, and braided directly upon the cloth, is a leading style. Soutaches are sewn edgewise upon other braids and materials to form trimmings, and are made up into patterns and ornaments. Soutache and cord drops, soutache-covered buttons, etc., play an important part in the new trimming schemes. Soutaches are seldom used alone; they are combined with the fibre, or, as they are called this year, the radium braids. Heavy fancy effects in these braids are more fashionable than the plain-woven patterns. Novelty braids have often a touch of tinsel in their makeup. Black braids are to be big sellers, but braids matching the color of the suit will be much used, and, therefore, the color line is an extensive one. The new Fall colors are just the ones that show up perfectly, in these bright braids. Braids are also to be used for binding purposes. This is a novel use, and one that is coming in with the new season.

Cut-out edge and straight band trimmings are used for vesting effects, and for inlaying velvet or cloth collars cuffs, etc The colorings are very harmonious, and the majority of these bands, etc., have a velvet ground. Tinsel is used to light up and to bring out the pattern.

Japanese embroideries, in band form, and also embroidery bands, worked upon silk, canvas and filet grounds, are the ultra style. Metal threads—gold, silver, copper, etc.—are prominent in these embroideries.

To round out trimming schemes, fancy metal buttons, crochet buttons, covered buttons and braid and cord drop ornaments are shown. Tassels are another form of decoration employed upon imported suits, coats and wraps.

There is more trimming upon skirts this Fall than for some time back. This tendency is more marked in the case of Paris gowns. This is caused, no doubt, by the difference in the skirt lengths favored. Paris has never taken kindly to walking length skirts. On this continent different modes of living, difference of environment, etc., make, for many uses, the walking length skirt a necessity. The skirts of Parisian gowns and suits are freely, not to say, elaborately, trimmed with braids, folds of velvet, etc. Our fashions have compromised with one or more fold of the material, and covered buttons to match.

AN ABSURD PRACTICE.

In Collingwood, nearly all of the stores remain open until eight, nine or ten o'clock, ordinarily, and on Saturday night till eleven or twelve o'clock. One firm had the courage and good sense over a year ago to close at six-fifteen ordinarily, and ten o'clock Saturdays. It has continued to do so, and states that, from the first, business did not suffer in the slightest degree. None of the others has followed its good example, although we believe the results would be equally as satisfactory. Doubtless all of thm would like to, but some are just too cross-grained to co-operate with their competitors in bringing about this much-needed change, or to admit that it could be made without loss of business. What nonsense! If it cannot be done in a simpler way, let someone ask the Retail Merchants' Association to send an organizer to Collingwood. Then, if the majority of retailers are willing to join, and are favorable to a fixed closing hour, the town council might be persuaded to pass a by-law providing that no stores, of certain classes, be kept open after a reasonable, specified time.

Collingwood is altogether too big and too good a town to longer tolerate an absurd practice which should have been dropped when it stepped out of its village clothes.

VERY POOR POLICY.

A firm of retailers have written The Review for advice respecting the refusal of a garment house to fill an order, at a special price quoted by one of its representatives. Their communication reads:

> "We ask for information re enclosed letter. The traveler took this order in good faith. He made a price of $7.50 all round on these coats—some were $7, some $7.50, and some $8.50—providing we took at least one dozen, assorted. No conditions were made as to sanction of house. Now, this house writes that it cannot fill the order, as per letters attached, and will not do so unless we pay the advanced prices they mention. We lost time in looking over these coats, and do not feel like allowing the order to be thus treated. Please give us your opinion: Are these people liable to loss of profit to us if they refuse to fill order? Would it be advisable to make them fill it?"

The order was dated June 27, and on July 3 the house wrote as follows:

> "We are sorry to say that we cannot accept order given to our Mr. ———, as we would lose money fast at that rate. If you would like to let us have the order at prices marked in ink, we would be very pleased to execute your order, and give you goods that will please you."

On July 22 the house forwarded this further communication:

> "We cancelled your order on its receipt by us, for the reasons stated. The order was taken by our Mr. ———, subject to our acceptance. If you want the goods you will have to pay our price for them. Much as we would like to do business with you, we cannot sell at a loss."

Now, in the first place, the retailers were lead to believe that the traveler had full authority from his employers to make the flat price of $7.50, in consideration of one dozen coats, assorted, being taken; and the house makes no claim that the quotation was not according to its instructions. Therefore, the assumption is reasonable that the traveler took the order in good faith, and had no cause to doubt that it would be filled without question at headquarters. Grounds might exist, in some cases, upon which a house would still be justified in refusing delivery of the goods, but they are not present here. Travelers were authorized to sell at certain rates, and offer special inducements to merchants buying specified quantities. Then, on the excuse that the filling of an order at these rates would entail actual loss, the house repudiates the transaction entered into by a representative, and states that delivery can be made—if the buyer is willing to pay higher prices.

The Review does not propose to waste space in further discussion of this matter. We advised the retailer to let it drop, adding that no house careful of its standing in the trade would pursue such tactics as this one has apparently done.

JUST IMAGINE!

Retail advertising that does not possess some of the chief qualities of a good salesman fails in its purpose. It should address the public in much the same tone as you adopt in talking to customers over your counter—a tone of reasonableness that is calculated to convince. Some merchants have utterly failed to grasp this point. They are the sensational advertisers who use up valuable space to exclaim that their entire stocks will be "sacrificed regardless of price"; that goods will be sold at "ridiculous" rates; that the "cutting and slashing" of prices at their stores is unprecedented in the history of merchandising; that they practically give away "dollar bills for fifty cents"; that theirs are the "greatest price-cutting sales on earth," etc. Imagine any one of these merchants making use of such terms while endeavoring to actually sell goods to a client! He wouldn't think of doing so. Then how in the name of reason can he justify their employment in his advertising?

CONSERVE YOUR RESOURCES.

A manufactory went into the hands of a receiver the other day, with assets and liabilities estimated at $2,000,000 and $1,000,000, respectively. Its failure is attributed to over-expansion, coupled with the tightness of the money market. In its eagerness to take full advantage of the prosperous times, the concern used up its available capital, relying on the banks for sufficient accommodation to see it through. At another time this might have been all right, but just now extraordinary conditions have to be taken into consideration. The banks were unable to advance the necessary amount of money, and the firm could not meet its obligations. At the same time its business was extensive, and steadily growing. With the support expected, after its resources had been heavily drawn upon for new machinery, etc., it would undoubtedly have soon regained a solid footing.

There is a lesson in this for every manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer. Money is scarce—very scarce—and they must all conserve their capital to satisfy current needs. The great danger is that the strong feeling of optimism which pervades not only the dry goods trade, but the whole country in general, will prompt over-expansion. Not that the full measure of optimism is not justified—it is—but that there is not money enough in Canada to permit of extension of industrial and mercantile facilities in accordance with it.

Of course, expansion in moderation is desirable and necessary, but let it be made on a safe basis. Take the retailer, for instance. He feels the need of a better building, new fixtures, etc., and should have them, providing they do not tie up so much capital as to cripple his buying powers. Remember, it is very difficult to get accommodation from the banks, and every merchant must operate, more than ever, within the limits of his own resources. Just here, we might add that it is very unwise for a man to place himself too much in the power of a bank at any time.

The money stringency is not confined to Canada alone; it exists throughout the world. Recent wars, requiring tremendous unproductive expenditures, contributed heavily toward its causes. Then followed a wholly unprecedented demand from industrial and mercantile sources. Legitimate investments offered such splendid returns that funds available for speculative purposes have been small, as evidenced by the inactivity of the stock market. In Canada, the banks began early preparations for the demands which will be made upon them for the moving of the Western crop, and they have been exerting themselves strenuously to gather in their resources.

NOTIONS MUST BE PROMINENT.

Surely there are few drygoodsmen in Canada who do not recognize the value of having the notion counter at the front of the store, preferably the first department that meets a customer's eye upon entering. From the very nature of its stock, this section demands prominence. With proper attention it will exert an attractive force and pay a profit that will entitle it to the choicest piece of floor space available. We know of several merchants who have not given their notion departments a fair chance, and would urge that they do so at once, assuring them that the move will be a very satisfactory one.

THE GREATEST EVENT OF ITS KIND.

The Canadian National Exposition, the greatest annual event of its kind in the world, is in progress at Toronto, and it is bigger and better than ever. Year by year splendid efforts are made to make it more and more representative of this grand and growing country. If the latter continues to expand at its present rate—and there is no good reason why it should not—the former will, in the course of a few years, attain magnificent proportions.

Many of our readers, particularly in Ontario, are attending the Exhibition, and, at the same time, taking advantage of the opportunity to call on Toronto houses with which they do business.

RETIREMENT OF JOHN KNOX COMPANY.

Regret was widespread among the trade when it was announced that the John Knox Company, of Hamilton, had seen fit to retire from the wholesale dry goods field. They have sold their business to Gordon, Mackay & Co., of Toronto. The firm is one which, through many years, has maintained a reputation for honorable dealing that won and held the respect of both customers and competitors.

A Supply Credit Business

By HOWARD R. WELLINGTON.

In this issue we outline a plan for ascertaining the present worth of the business after the profits have been ascertained from the Trading and Profit and Loss accounts, as shown last month.

The statement of Assets and Liabilities would appear somewhat as follows :

ASSETS.

Cash on hand		$ 850
Merchandise, stock		20,000
Accounts Receivable		20,000
Bills receivable		2,000
Schooners (3) at depleted value		7,300
Total	$8,800
Less	1,500
Equipment at depleted value		3,000
Total	$3,500
		$53,150

LIABILITIES.

Accounts payable		$15,000
Bills payable		10,000
Capital account		28,150
	$15,600
		$53,150

This statement does not need any further explanation ; except that it is always a good plan to arrange the assets in the order of their convertibility into cash. The Capital account, after the profits of the period have been transferred from the Profit and Loss account, shows the net worth of the proprietor. It is usual to keep a Personal account with the proprietor, against which are charged all drawings for the period, the total of which may be transferred to the Capital account at the end of the period. Another plan is to credit the Personal account, month by month, with a certain salary, which the proprietor allows himself for running the business, this item of expense being charged against the regular Salary or Expense account. In this way the proprietor will know to better advantage what his investment in the business is yielding him.

A Cash Book which would prove very suitable for a business of this nature, is outlined below, showing cash received and cash payments, and combining both Bank and Cash accounts :

Cash Received.

Date.	Credit Account.	Folio.	Discount.	Cash.	Bank.	Cash Sales.	Bills Rec'd.
Aug. 5	J. Smith.	510	15	$7.50	....	....	....
Aug. 6	T. Brown.	650	10	4.50	12.00	....	....
Aug. 7	Cash Sales.	....	..	10.00	....	10.00	....

Cash Payments.

Date.	Debit Account.	Folio.	Cash.	Bank.	Interest and Discount.	Coll. and Ex.	Expense.
Aug. 5	Freight.	....	$ 1.50	....	....	....	$1.50
Aug. 6	Deposit.	....	12.00	....	....	....	....
Aug. 7	Deposit.	....	60.00	....	....	....	....
Aug. 7	Int. & Dis.	....	1.50	....	1.50	....	....
Aug. 7	Coll. & Ex.	....	2.00	....	....	2.00	....

Any number of columns may be added on the credit side for extending the various items of expense, and the more columns the less posting, as only one total is posted at the end of the month. It is a good plan if, when having a book ruled specially for this purpose, a column or two be left without title, so that this may be written in, when the items occuring most frequently can be ascertained.

Western Trade Conditions

Summer dry goods trade in the West has not been up to expectations, unfavorable, freakish weather having upset the calculations of the shrewdest buyers and the best dry goods men. Stores that loaded up heavily with Summer goods have had to face the alternative of clearing out these lines at or around cost, or of carrying them over for another season. The general money stringency has compelled most merchants to adopt the former policy, and it certainly is the wiser under almost any circumstances. The result has been an epidemic of bargain sales in city and country, which have proved very popular. One effect, as was pointed out to The Review by a commercial traveler well acquainted with conditions throughout the West, has been to provide a counter attraction to the mail order catalogue and department store advertisements. The local bargain sales and the increased advertising by local stores throughout the Western Provinces have served to direct the attention of the public to the excellent values to be obtained at home, and the effect of an unfavorable season has, therefore, not been wholly bad. Small stores have been using more progressive methods and pursuing a line of policy which might with advantage have been adopted long ago.

Hyndman & Co., the hustling men's furnishers and clothiers, conducted a second "red tag movement" sale last month. The first red tag sale, held a year or two ago, was described in The Review at the time. It was something new, it aroused the curiosity of the public, and it was an immense success. It did its work so well, the first time, that Mr. Hyndman undertook to try it again. This time people knew exactly what the "red tag movement" was, it excited no curiosity, and, as a business-getter, it was only a very mild success. Mr. Hyndman is an aggressive and original advertiser, and the public are always wondering what he will do next. Usually he has something new about five or six times per year. On this occasion he tried to repeat an old success and failed. The experience will probably convince him that it does not pay to work a novel scheme of the crass of the "red tag movement" twice. What will Mr. Hyndman do next? The Review, like the general public, is waiting to see what new idea he will launch for the Fall trade. It is not likely that Mr. Hyndman's Fall trade advertising scheme will be a disappointment.

Nevertheless, the department stores are growing. This Summer has seen a big addition to the T. Eaton Co. store in Winnipeg, by which their floor space will be increased about fifty per cent. It was the original intention to have the new addition ready for the Exhibition trade in July, but, owing to unfavorable weather, and strikes in the building trades, it is not yet ready for occupancy. The Winnipeg store of this firm has plenty of room for expansion, as the Eaton Co. own the whole block on which it is situated. In that respect, it has the advantage of the Toronto store, which is shut in by other stores.

Last month saw the opening in Winnipeg of a 5, 10 and 15 cent store, and old-timers are grieved to see the cheap-bargain-hunting habits of the East gaining such firm hold in the West. The opening created no little excitement among the womenkind of Winnipeg, and for an hour before the doors were opened, it was impossible to get on the sidewalk opposite the store, so large was the crowd of bargain-hunters anxious to secure the first snaps offered. The store is located in the corner of the new Somerset Block on Portage avenue, built by J. A. M. Aikins, K.C. It is thus directly across the street from Eaton's.

The general outlook for Fall and Winter business is uncertain at the present time. Very much depends on the crops. Given a favorable September, there will, undoubtedly, be a very fair crop, except in a few districts that have suffered from hail. Manitoba will be below the average. Saskatchewan will have an average crop, and reports from Alberta indicate the largest crop on record. Dollar wheat seems very likely, and, at all events, there is no doubt the price will be much higher than last year. If the wheat escapes the September frosts there will be no particular reason for complaint. Of course, that is a most important "if," as the crop is about three weeks later than usual.

If there is anything approaching an average crop, business will be very brisk this Fall, in dry goods lines. The long, hard Winter had the effect of reducing all Winter goods stocks in the retail stores, and if there is a good outlook for business this Fall, there will be heavy buying of Winter goods. Wholesale houses are expecting big business in Winter goods, and they have been stocking accordingly. Usually the Winter goods are pretty well sold by September 1st, but this year the trade have been cautious in their buying, owing to the uncertainty of the outlook. In this they are probably wise.

The general tightness of money has also contributed to curtailing buying. In the West this tightness of money has been coincident with a hard Winter, during which all transportation lines were tied up, and an unfavorable Spring and Summer, with consequent uncertain crop outlook. As a result, many people have been disposed to consider the tightness of money as being directly due to the uncertain crop outlook. No doubt this has been a contributory cause, but the tightness of money is an universal condition. A good crop in the West will relieve the local situation somewhat, but cannot relieve, to any considerable extent, the general stringency of the money market. Until that stringency is relieved business men will have difficulty in getting money from the banks, and it is the part of wisdom to recognize this fact in making plans for future business.

John Knox Company Sell

Their Business Has Been Merged With That of Gordon, Mackay & Co.

The John Knox Company, of Hamilton, has sold out to Gordon, Mackay & Co., of Toronto. The Review is informed that the transaction involves about a quarter million dollars.

The business was purchased in 1882, by the firm of which John Knox was the head, and which has always carefully guarded a reputation, early acquired, for square dealing.

For over seven years the wholesale dry goods house has been the smallest of John Knox's business interests.

THE RIBBON MARKET.

Buyers who have returned from foreign markets comment upon the busy aspect of looms in Swiss centres and St. Etienne. The raw silk market shows full strength and great trouble has been experienced by foreign manufacturers, on account of the difficulty in getting sufficient quantity dyed. The latest situation is still unsatisfactory, and the price of labor is much higher. A good many of these causes tending to raise the price of ribbons are the result of the world-wide demand. Prices for the Spring season are extremely high, and show an advance in some lines of fully forty per cent. over figures ruling a year ago.

A SIXTY-MINUTE SALE.

A "Sixty Minute Sale" was advertised by Scroggie's, Montreal, for Saturday morning, August 24, at eight o'clock. At seven thirty the first bargain hunter appeared. Then, in a few minutes, along came a street car containing half a score more. Eight o'clock saw quite a gathering, and it became apparent that this long anticipated sale was to be met by the public in no half-hearted way. Women flocked from every direction and elbowed their way to the doors, inside of which stood eleven constables. When the doors were swung open, there was a big rush to the departments in which specials were being offered first. Up to one o'clock the sale continued in the various sections, so many at one time. The briskness of the business done can be estimated from the fact that 1,800 shirts were sold in one hour. A number of policemen were required to keep the crowd in order.

This sale of Scroggie's was quite a novelty. Each counter at which a sale was to be conducted was marked with a big sign, in the centre of which was an alarm clock. Programs were handed round, stating what articles were being sold, their prices and location of the counters. The sale was advertised in all the daily papers, both Freneh and English. Window displays, with a clock neatly worked into each, co-operated in drawing the crowd.

Have you ever seen

The "Ladiwear" Brand Waists

You may not have, because the output for the season just closed (our first in the waist business) was sold up three weeks after their appearance in February. Consequently, the line was withdrawn.

The immediate success of the new Ladiwear Waists has necessitated that we establish an entirely separate factory from our present plant.

OUR NEW WAIST FACTORY (in the West end) is thoroughly equipped with the most modern machinery, and is capable of turning out your order satisfactorily.

The new range for Spring delivery is now with our representatives, and has been pronounced by those who know value. as the best ever.

Part of our policy has always been to figure a liberal margin of profit to merchants; and in emphasizing the attractiveness of Ladiwear Waists, we insist that no competing styles can make as much money for you in such short order.

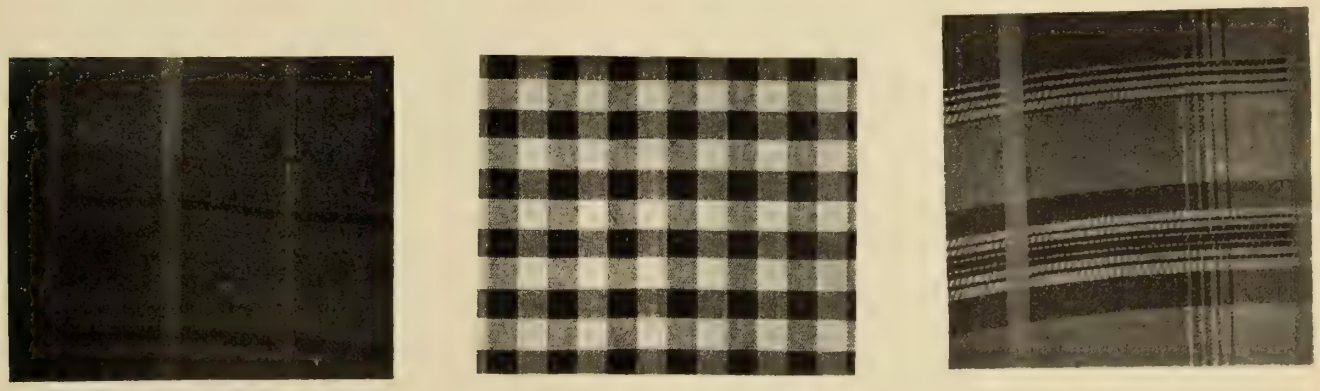
The New Fall Coats

Many Buyers in the Market—Full Length and Three-Quarter Coats Selling in Fitted, Semi-Fitted and Loose Effects.

The Fall openings are beginning to mean nearly as much to the garment manufacturer as they do to the millinery houses. New ideas are put into form and the buying that is then done is regarded as an important indication as to the tendency of the later Fall and Winter styles. It is right in the midst of this busy time that The Review goes to press, and, therefore, it is impossible to rightly estimate, with any degree of accuracy, just how far buying tendencies have carried. That buying has not been confined to any one style is certain. There is no doubt that buyers have made the rounds and picked out of each line the models most suited to their trade. Fitted, semi-fitted and loose models have all sold. The big majority has, however, been done on the long, loose models. Buyers like this shape of coat, and there are no fitting problems attending its sale. For the larger centres, where there is not so much trouble experienced in having alterations properly made, semi-fitting models have been freely taken. Not only the semi-fitting styles, but fitted coats, also, have found favor with western buyers.

The tendency is for long coats, though there has been some sale of three-quarters and even shorter models. Though the tailored styles are universal in popular-priced lines, more trimming is used this year than for many seasons past. Braids are very much used, both soutache and fancy fibre. Buttons and velvet are also good, and on some of the more elaborate coats drop ornaments and cord are used.

The fancy tweeds and paid effects of last year have dropped completely out of favor. Black kerseys and broadcloths have almost monopolized the advance sale. There is, however, a feeling that colored cloths are gaining ground, and that considerably more will be heard of them as the season advances.



The sleeve is where much of the novelty of the new coats lies. Modified Japanese ideas are prominent, the long shoulder effect and the wide armhole being simulated by both cut and by trimming effects.

Early Showings of Fall Suits

Fitting Models in Thumb Length the Leader—Braid Trimmings and Vest Effects Much Seen.

The early models in Fall suits are now showing, and women are inspecting them with eager interest. The majority of them have what is called the thumb-length coat, that is, the edge of the coat is in a line with the thumb when the arm is held down. A few shorter coats, and numerous longer ones, are seen. Models are very much braid-trimmed, with fancy braids being freely used, as well as soutache.

Vest effects are seen on many models. Many are of velvet or contrasting cloth, or of the fashionable fancy bandings. The vest materials and effect is repeated on the cuff and pocket trimmings. A number of the imported models have the vest of the new imitation furs. With the exception of tans, the colors are very dark. Fancy cloths are used, but the pattern is almost invisible. There is a good range of colors shown, but as selling has not yet begun, color preferences are as yet not clearly defined. The pleated model with one or two, or even three, self folds, is the universal skirt.

Rubberized Silk for Raincoats.

Waists

Holiday Trade Models Showing—New Lawn Waists—Still the Three-quarter Sleeve.

Manufacturers are out with dressy lines of waists for the late Fall and for the holiday trade. Some showing has been made and orders taken for lawn waists for early Spring. Sample lines are not yet quite complete, and novelties are expected later. Many of the lawn waists bought now are for present delivery, as there is an increasing demand for white washing waists to wear under fur coats.

Waists of lace and net, and of all-over lace promise to be extra good for the holiday trade. The laces most used are Irish and Venise. For trimming the net waists a combination of Irish and Cluny is most liked. The chief novelty in the make-up of these waists is the introduction of color as a trimming or a lining. Thus, an all-over lace waist will be made up over a lining of pale-tinted Japanese silk, or folds, bow-knots, and even little vest effects enriched with gold or silver soutache in the leading fashionable colors in silk or velvet will trim the new lace waists.

Waists of colored chiffon are coming to the fore. These are simply made with band trimmings of lace, etc. The lining is of white Japana silk, and there is a guimpe effect of white lace, a similar lace trims the sleeve.

This simpler effect is prominent in the new lingerie models, and those for early Spring are in big contrast to the fussy modes that have prevailed for some time back. Free use is made of embroidered frontings. A handsome fronting can be quickly developed into an attractive waist at little cost for making. This means that a waist of superior fabric and pattern can be put on the market at a reasonable price.

The feature of the Spring season of 1908 will be the handsome lace embroideries used. Filet effects, such as The Review shewed last month, will be the leading novelty. These embroideries are directly up to New York ideas, and promise to constitute the novelty also on that market.

The three-quarter sleeve is universal, and promises to be the proper sleeve for 1908. So far as can be seen, the long sleeve has no particular hold on Paris styles. All but a very few of the ultra garments are made with the elbow or three-quarter sleeve. Tailored suits and wrap coats are rarely made with the full length sleeve the three-quarter anl the seven-eighth lengths being generally chosen. Nevertheless, the first little hint of a change has been given.

SILK WAIST FIRM REORGANIZED.

The American Silk Waist Co., Montreal, are reorganizing into a limited concern, and have applied for a Dominion charter, with a capital of $50,000. The old principals of the firm, Messrs. Kars, Weiman, Eliasoph, Goldberg and Shlakman, are still identified with the firm. In order to secure complete co-operation of their help a profit sharing plan has been introduced into their business. The firm has been delayed with fall samples on account of reorganization, but the new line will be ready shortly.

Separate Skirts

The Almost Universal Vogue of the Pleated Skirt—The Circular Skirt in Paris.

Much as pleated skirts have been worn during the past two seasons, they promise to eclipse all previous records in the coming Fall. With the advent of tweeds, and of firmer Winter cloths, wider pleats are showing. The distinctive feature of the new skirts is the fold or folds of the material. Wide box pleats are popular as well as wide side pleats.

The rival of the pleated skirt is the one of circular cut. Paris is showing these circular skirts almost exclusively. As Parisian skirts all rest on the ground there is not the objection to overcome that our manufacturers find with this cut. Canadian women favor short skirts, and circular skirts of this variety will sag no matter how carefully they are made or cut.

Fall Corset Models

Long Models Coming Into General Use—New Models Give Great Satisfaction—General Use of Brassieres.

Heavy buying for fall has been the rule, and everything points to a good selling season. There has been no general advance in corset prices, notwithstanding the fact that the cost of labor and materials have increased enormously. Tantamount to an advance, however, is the action of a combination of American manufacturers in refusing to give laces with every corset ordered. Laces will not be put in corsets, nor will the manufacturer let the buyer have them below cost. As far as The Review can ascertain, the American corset firms are fully living up to their agreement.

The present-day corset models may be said to be a survival of the fittest. Corset manufacturers have been at work upon the old straight front models, and each season has seen an elimination of some objectionable feature, and an improvement of desirable ones. The present models are pretty near perfection. Not only do they give great elegance of form, but they give great comfort as well; in fact, it is now possible by careful fitting to give a smart line to almost any figure. Even decidedly bad figures can be made to pass muster.

Just what has been accomplished in corsetdom can be best realized when the average figure of a few years back is compared with that of to-day. This big change has been brought about largely by the makers of popular-priced corsets. It is true that the popular price is now fixed at a higher figure, and that figure is advancing. Nevertheless, it is to the manufacturer of the popular-priced lines—to the care and finish that he gives to his product—that this great change is due. Not only do corsets improve the figure nowadays, but they are more comfortable to wear. They conform more to the natural outline, and give much more ease and grace.

Heavier orders have been placed for the long models this Fall, and gradually they are coming into general use. This increased length presents new problems for the manufacturer to solve, as they are more difficult to fit with comfort. They must be so cut and boned that the length of the skirt does not interfere with comfort when sitting, nor must the bust sink into the top of the corset. The various devices for giving the necessary height to the bust—the brassiere top, the broken bust effect, etc.—are giving way to the separate brassiere. With the present style of dress, brassieres are a necessity, and many styles are on the market. It is not just the fleshy woman who is wearing a brassiere—nearly every perfectly corseted woman wears one. Some brassieres can take the place of the corset cover, and are lace trimmed, etc. The latest idea is a brassiere made of ribbon and boned and laced in front. This can be had in ribbons matching the girdle corsets for slender figures.

An extra number of jartelles, or hose supporters, are worn now. These are carried as accessories in most corset departments, and their sale adds materially to profits. Many are covered with fancy shirred ribbon and are adorned with dainty bows.

Raincoats

New Rubberized Silks Improve Sales—Loose Models and Plain and Plaid Clothes Showing.

The new rubberized silks now used for raincoats promise to revive interest in this line. They are very smart as well as useful. Styles are long and loose, and all the new fashioned touches—the deep shoulder, full sleeve, Japanese armhole, etc.—are present. The new coats have all the appearance of a silk garment, and all the usefulness of a rainproofed one. The combination promises to make for good business. The colors shown come in a good range, and are extra attractive. Black, garnet and royal have been the best sellers in the plain silk cloth, and in plaids, garnet, royal, green and shepherd checks have interested buyers.

Veilings

Good Fall Season Expected—Colored Made Veils in the Lead—Purple Shades Expected to Sell.

The season just opening promises to be an extra good veiling season. Hats are large, and, therefore, made veils will be more worn than yardage goods. Properly managed, this is always a profitable condition for the department. Favor will be divided between Tuxedos and hair lines, and large chenille dotted effects will be very fashionable. The colored veil will be the leader, and all the staple shades will have to be stocked. In large departments the colors stocked will have to include all the leading novelty shades—browns, blues, greens, etc. The new evique, or Bishop's purple, promises to be a good millinery shade, and will also be wanted in veilings. Chiffons will be in heavy demand, both for street wear and for automobiling.

Circular and square shapes, are the novelties in made veils.

LONDON.

Business has been rather quiet with wholesalers during the past week, many of the London travelers having been taken off the road and sent to Toronto to cultivate the trade at the big exhibition. For the two ensuing weeks, also, country merchants will enjoy a respite from the visits of drummers, who, during Fair time here, will be busily employed as they are just now at Toronto.

There promises to be a great scarcity of cotton goods next season, particularly of ginghams and prints. Local wholesalers find it impossible to induce manufacturers to undertake to fix any time for the delivery of goods, and the indications are not only that there will be a scarcity, but that prices will advance. The reason assigned for this is a somewhat peculiar one. The girls employed in the mills, we are told, have been making so much on piece-work, that they find themselves possessed of money unusual to them, and feel they are in a position to take vacations like other people. These vacations, in some instances, extend to a month, in others to an indefinite period, and the consequence has been, not a little demoralization of mill staffs, so that the manufacturers hardly know where they are at, and do not feel like making promises.

A London traveler, discussing the advance in the price of spools, declares the consumers are to blame for the present so-called scarcity. When some time ago the price was put up, housewives, tailors, dressmakers, and the rest of the users became panicky, fearing a further advance, and proceeded to purchase in unusually large quantities of their favorite thread. Others, equally as good, could be had for the old price, a fact which merchants tried to impress upon them ; but they must have their particular goods or none.

The condition of the country roads causes no little inconvenience to travelers who have to do some driving. The custom is to dump gravel in a heap along the centre each Spring, rendering the roads extremely rough during the Summer

Londoners were shocked to learn of the death at Winnipeg of Geo. Sippi, western traveler for Robinson, Little & Co., wholesale dry goods, of this city, as the result of an operation for appendicitis. Deceased was for many years connected with the local warehouse of Robinson, Little & Co., but was more prominently known in military circles, where he had figured conspicuously during the last few years of his residence here. When the Seventh Regiment was reorganized under Lt.-Col. Smith, in 1899, he was appointed color-sergeant of "B" Company, and was responsible to a large degree for the ultimate enviable condition into which the company developed, being composed chiefly of wholesale warehouse employes and known as the crack company of the regiment. When the call for volunteers to go to South Africa came, Color-Sergeant Sippi was one of the first to present himself for service, and in the Fall of 1898 he left with the first Canadian contigent, and served through their term in the war. In the first engagement he was wounded, but recovered entirely and resumed his post as first non-commissioned officer of his company, and on campaign. Mr. Sippi was also honored by the Royal campaign. Mr. Sippi was a.so honored by the Royal Humane Society, and wore one of their medals, given him for saving a little child from being run over by a fire wagon. Mr. Sippi's prominence was not confined to business and military affairs alone. Manly athlete that he was, he took a deep interest in sports of all kinds, and no one was ever more energetic or enthusiastic than he when he turned his efforts in any set direction. In all the athletics of the regiment, he played a leading part. He at one time played baseball in the old City League, on the Arlington team. But it was probably in the department of rugby football that he shone brightest of all, and he played on the champion London team. He was also a member of the famous London hockey team which won the Western Ontario championship, playing effectually on left wing. About two years ago, he was married to Miss Buchan, daughter of Dr. Buchan, of the London Asylum, and ever since had been residing in Winnipeg, from where he traveled throughout the west

THE BRITISH MARKETS

The News from London, Bradford, Manchester, Belfast, Nottingham and Scotland.

The past month has seen a great improvement in the retail trade situation, in London and in the provinces. The big July business is now being reflected, in the wholesale houses, and due to its influence upon Fall orders, August rarely opened a brisker business. Already early Autumn displays are being made, for the benefit of those who are preparing for their annual exodus to the seashore, and for the ubiquitous American visitor.

In the between-seasons lull, the vexed question, as to the continuance of the living-in system, has come, more prominently than ever, to the front. This is due to attacks upon it, made by no less personages than Frank Bullen, the author, and Father Bernard Vaughan, the Jesuit priest, who has gained notoriety by his scathing denunciations of the sins and follies of smart society. The way in which the system is defended by the trade shows how difficult it is to change a settled usage, in the old land. As practiced by reputable firms, living-in has some points in its favor, but it puts an immense power into the hands of tyrannical employers.

The Silk Crop.

In the July letter, reference was made to the large silk crop this year, in Europe, and in Asia, to its probable effect upon the price of the finished fabric. Reports from Lyons point to something that comes very near being a corner there. The men concerned are strong, and are prepared, it is said, to hold out for a considerable time. Therefore, the upward tendency is likely to continue. Manufacturers, and selling agents do not look upon this move with any great degree of favor. On the one hand, manufacturers have not been getting prices for the finished fabric commensurate with that paid for the raw product, and agents fear that higher prices may have a restrictive influence upon sales.

There has been a change, recently, in the personnel of the firm of Francois & Co., Wood street. Miss F. Gold, who has for some years managed the millinery department, has been admitted into the firm.

Bradford.

The whole tendency of the market here is toward a continued maintenance of the present high wool values. It should be carefully noted that Bradford wool combers are beginning to work shorter hours. One of the largest firms has for several weeks past ended the week's work on Thursday night. As prices are high, profits good, and spinners booked well into next year, there is nothing in the situation to account for this action, save scarcity of raw wool. Good wools are just as hard to buy as they were last May. Therefore, the next clip must come in sight before there is even the slightest possibility of a change. This applies to crossbreds as well as merinos. The slight decline apparent before the last series of London sales has been fully recovered.

Cheviots and serges, in a big range of colorings, are coming strongly into vogue for the Autumn months. Venetians and Amazons have sold extensively. Tweeds are keeping up better than was expected. There is also some ordering out of smart novelty effects in tweeds for next Spring.

Manchester.

The Summer business has been, on the whole, disappointing. Repeat orders, though better now than earlier, are somewhat light. For Autumn buying a hand-to-mouth-policy is finding favor, due in part to the high level of prices. Manufacturers are not doing so well, owing to the stiff rate for yarns, as well as the high price of the raw staple.

The export trade is dull in most quarters, and quotations are irregular. Spinners of American yarns are said to be losing ground. Egyptian yarns are strong, and quotations are firmly held.

The report of Rylands and Sons, Limited, indicates that the great Manchester concern has made a highly satisfactory recovery from the depression of the second half of 1906. The net profits shown in the balance-sheet amount to £118,700, an increase of £8,800 over the results of the corresponding period. The distribution is at the customary rate of 12½ per cent., while £15,000 is carried to reserve, £5,000 to insurance fund, and £26,200 is left for the carry forward. The reserve is thus brought up to £500,000, and the insurance fund to £250,000—a total of £750,000, or half the share capital of the company.

Nottingham.

The lace trade has had a most successful year. To the skilled operator, doing the best work, it has been, and still is, something of a gold mine, as wages have averaged from £2 to £6 per week. There are still some nice-sized orders going the rounds, and, according to all accounts, there will shortly be a rush. Most of these orders are from America, and are for future delivery.

Goods orders are coming in for cotton nets. Finer nets for Plauen, and for home demand, are in request. Tulles and silk nets are receiving attention. In laces, guipures are gaining ground, and Clunys, Maltese and similar laces, are strongly in evidence. Valenciennes and torchons are big sellers, and embroidered goods are in great request.

North of Ireland.

What slight change there is in the market is towards improvement. Fortunately, the coal carters' strike has been settled, and a general stoppage, for lack of fuel, averted. The demand for yarns is of a hand-to-mouth character, but spinners are extremely busy. The home demand for bleached and finished linens is improving. A considerable number of orders are coming from America, and export business generally is substantial and satisfactory.

Scotch Notes.

Large quantities of goods are being shipped to Canada. Fifeshire linen manufacturers are being pressed for delivery. Winter business has been good in the tweed trade, and a start has been made upon Spring orders, confirmations for which have come in remarkably well. Buyers are taking finer makes and higher-priced goods. Hosiery and knitting mills are very busy. Checked zephyrs and ginghams have been in great request, the demand greatly exceeding the supply.

Manufacture of Knitting Wools and Hosiery Yarns

(The British Trade Journal.)

The Beehive brand of knitting wools is not familiar without reasons. It has been spun uninterruptedly since 1785, has been produced in a bulk not exceeded by any other make, and it has been advertised. There is hardly room for surprise, then, on finding the factory of its origin conspicuous by its large proportions even in a district notable for the size of its mills. Messrs. J. & J. Baldwin & Partners, Limited, employ about 1,800 hands, and control five other premises, but those at Clark Bridge, Halifax, are chief and foremost. A view of the interior does nothing to lessen one's original conception of the importance of the business. Inside, no room is wasted. Each cranny is turned to some useful account. The mills are no less busy than the hives that have been selected as their symbolical device, and the fact that a mortar-mill is numbered among the firm's assets, suggests that more, rather than less, business is to be attempted in the future. The home market for more than a hundred years has insisted upon having Beehive yarn. The colonies, great and small, and many foreign countries, are awakening to the fact that the brand is good, and that the firm is unsurpassed for manufacturing yarns for all classes and climates; and in the most highly-protected foreign markets the virtues of J. & J. Baldwin's worsted yarns have long been recognized. Even Germany, which endeavors so strenuously to spin all the wool she needs, must perforce send to Halifax for the best grades of fingering, hosiery and kindred wools.

Why this should be so is not perhaps so great a mystery as it seems. The manufacture is a complex one, calling for special aptitudes and cares, delicate adjustments and a nice judgment upon an infinity of items. To unbare the whole technique of the process would serve no eminently useful purpose here; yet there are salient points that must be grasped if one is to understand the system reasonably well. The first of these is the outstanding circumstance that the successful spinner must do everything himself. Except that at Clark Bridge no wool is grown, the whole evolution from the greasy, tangled and dirty fleece, up to the dainty and lustrous thread, takes place upon the one set of premises. The wool warehouse is piled high with raw wool in tons. It is Australian merino wool that lies in the press-packed bales and Sussex Down wool that is contained in the more cumbrous packages. These are both soft, fine elastic fibres, edged by innumerable minute serrations and on their characteristics almost all else depends. Good yarn is to be had from nothing less than good material, and that the warehoused wool is excellent an expert testifies.

Wool-Sorting Room.

Taken from its wrappings, the wool is lifted a fleece at a time upon a table facing strong north light. The fleece is torn from neck to tail in half and sorted. That is to say, the fleece is dissected by skilled fingers into no less than ten different qualities or parts. Each part goes to its own proper pile or basket, to be used in such combination and fashion as craft dictates. What becomes of wool from black or brown sheep has puzzled many of the uninitiated. At Messrs. Baldwin's, at any rate, the dark wool is used to mingle with the white, forming mixtures of so-called natural color in which there is no dye. There are circumstances in which artificial coloring may be deleterious, and it is proper to recognize that garments may be had that are free from any such suspicion. The admixture of colors belongs, however, to a subsequent process. The first measure in advancing the manufacture, is to wash the wool and to wash it well. As forty-five per cent. of grease and dirt is by no means an unusual ratio of superfluous matter, the desirability is self-evident. For washing, there must be soap, and this also is boiled upon the site of its consumption, from a compound of the finest alkalis and olive oil. The act of washing is performed by machines. In a long trough, forks are at work in gently agitating the material and passing it forth to other forks, and so out of the first machine. Automatically, the wool is forced by water into a second machine in which the washing fluid is clearer, and again into a third machine. As each is something like double the length of a billiard table, and as the transit is slow and the washing motion varied, the wool is clean when, in loose locks, it is thrown semi-dry from a rapidly revolving paddle-wheel.

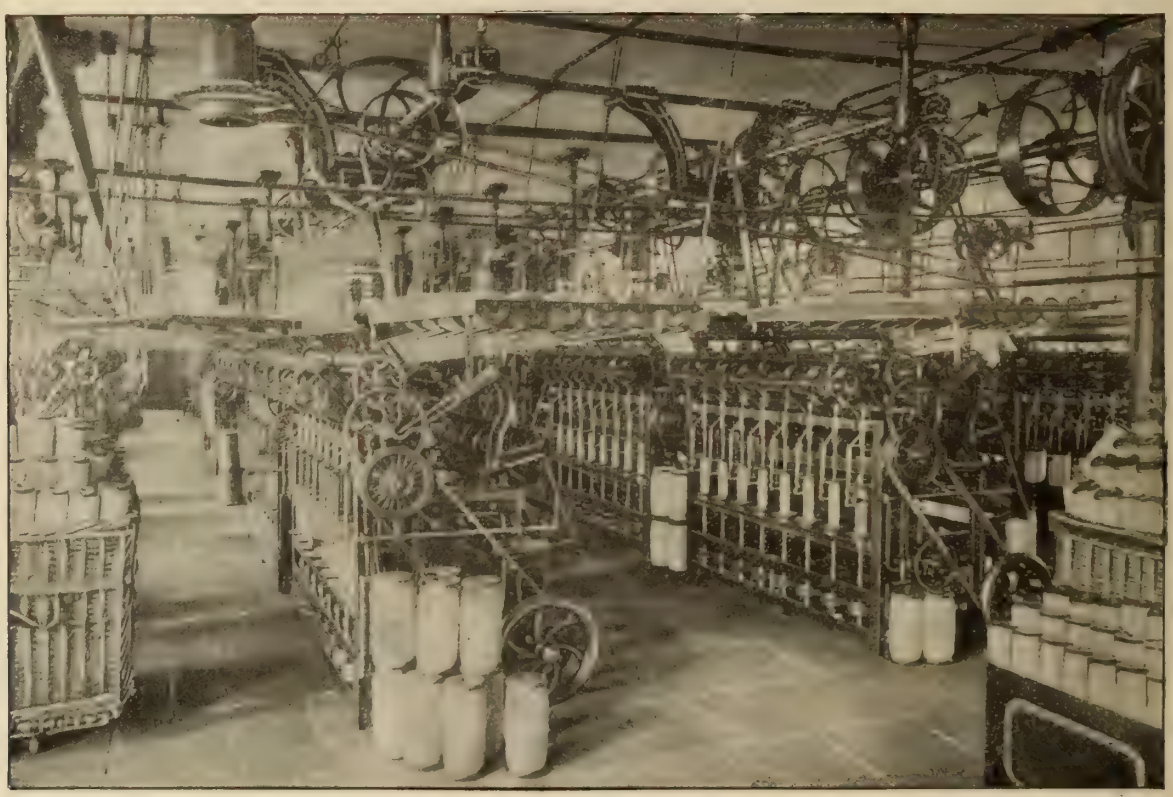
Having been washed, the material passes to one out of the nineteen carding-engines on the floor above. Thus the wool receives its preliminary straightening. The carding process is carried out by a series of large and small rollers, covered with myriads of wire points, which engage with each other and drag the wool in the form of a fine gauze veil, into a loose, narrow rope of "sliver" at last. The utmost circumspection as to the adjustment of these rollers is required, for an error of only 1-32nd of an inch will go far to ruin yarn.

After the carding, the combing comes, which again is an operation of much delicacy. Being performed upon circle-combs, a new form of sliver called "slubbing" is obtained; and then the back of the work is broken. Thereafter, all that remains is to draw the slubbing a little finer and to give to it a little more twist. That, in brief, is the process; but if the wool be intended for use as white, the slubbing is washed again. If it is to be dyed, the thick coil of parallel fibres is removed to the dyehouse, where also it is cleansed from any undesirable matters accruing during manipulation. Dyeing is in itself a separate care. The problem is to make colors that are fast. It is evident that dyes that fade in the sunlight or in washing, and dyes that stain the wearer's skin, are useless. In avoiding these mischiefs, Messrs. Baldwin have been conspicuously successful, and to such details, small as they may appear, some share of their prosperity is to be traced. Of course, it is to a combination of the lesser excellences that perfection is due, and to give weight to more of them, one must penetrate again into the arcana of technical experts. Though the concluding processes are relatively simple, they are not to be hastened over or despised.

In a considerable measure, the ultimate effects are contigent upon these incidents also. One of the more vital processes is that known as "drawing," to which the whole of two large rooms is devoted. Here colored slubbings are intermingled interminably, as it seems, to bring forth the favorite heather mixtures. Time and again is the material submitted to a form of combing, which has for its object the complete amalgamation of the constituent fibres. They must be worked ceaselessly until the jarring color-contrasts they at first present are reduced to a melange that is almost a monotone and is entirely soothing to the eye.



Yarn Making-up Department.

Messrs. J. & J. Baldwin keep a great stock on hand of "slubbings" or "rovings." They are stored on giant bobbins, iron-bound at the base, and all colors, as well as white, and all qualities, are represented. To the buyer this means the possibility of prompt delivery. On occasion, it means that a fairly large quantity of yarn can be shipped at a notice of two or three days. Were there no such reserves of semi-completed material, the operation would have to commence at the beginning. Conceivably, even, the buyer might need to wait until the spinner had acquired the raw wool itself. In such an event, the delay must mean weeks. This system of accumulating materials in the handiest form for immediate use, is not confined to this single example. For practical purposes, however, this instance is the one deserving of emphasis. An order for urgent delivery does not disorganize the whole mill and dislocate all other arrangements. The bobbins are, in a compendious form, the essence of all that Messrs. Baldwin make. It is necessary only to take out a sufficient quantity, give instructions for replacing the deficiency created, and to carry the rovings to the spindles. Very many of the regular makes of yarn are compounds of two, three, or more colors. Some are 2-ply, 3-ply, 4- or even 6-ply, of a varying assemblage of colors. To keep adequate stocks wholly manufactured is out of the question. By resolving the stock into the most proximate elements, supplies are kept in their most mobile form.

The bobbins being brought to the spinning and twisting frames, the mechanism very quickly reduces the thread to its due size, and wraps it with as many of its fellows as are required to produce the mottled effect desired. Thus the yarn is obtained upon bobbins, and from them it has to be "reeled" into small hanks, if the thread be for retail sale. Should the yarn be destined for use upon knitting machines, it will be wound expeditiously into the form known as "cheeses" or special large hanks. The hanks may nest need to be dyed ; if they are sent forth as white, they must once more be washed. After drying in draught chambers in hot air and finally in cold, the hanks are ready for the deft hands of girls to ticket each small hank and to assemble them into greater hanks, each weighing one pound. Thereafter, the hanks in handy presses are formed into bundles and thence into parcels, and afterwards again into hydraulically-pressed bales. The packing is governed by the needs of the market and the nature of the goods. Such fancy threads as "Ivorine" and "Silk Motor" wool are boxed more usually in cartons and despatched in cases. The former is delicately-dyed wool wrapped with a thread of silk's prime rival, mercerized cotton. There is this to recommend "Ivorine" for export, that it is enabled to pass through certain custom houses on a less adverse tariff than wool mixed with silk. This statement of fact in no way disparages the tasteful "Silk Motor" wool, whose ally is real silk. Either lends itself gracefully to the production of wraps, shawls, mufflers, and kindred triumphs of feminine industry.

Eider wools, vest wools, Andalusian and Shetland wools, in company with the highly-favored "Lady Betty Fleecy," are types of Messrs. Baldwin's higher products. They serve decorative as well as hygienic ends, and ought, perhaps, to be considered apart from the yarns which make mere stockings. Of these last, there is no mean variety and no absence of good taste in the combination of colorings. There are also the numerous self-colored wools, black, blue, scarlet, and so forth, named Soft-Knitting, Fingering, Merino and Berlin, made in sizes to meet all comers' needs. Such, in general, are the goods branded "Beehive." In addition, there are others that are sent anonymously into the world in very large quantities. They are principally for the employment of patent knitting machines for hosiery and other manufacturing purposes, and are in some cases of cheaper price than the central specialities. To appreciate these products to the full, samples and shade cards must be obtained. Machinery exists for the production of cards in a handy and convenient shape, and there need be no reluctance in asking to see a representative collection of knitting yarns admittedly of the first class.

A Drawing Room.

As may be gathered, the adminstration and organizing of a factory of these dimensions and in this complex trade are anything but easy matters. Yet an inspection shows that the thirteen major and interdependent departments dovetail perfectly into a symmetrical whole, which encloses many minor ones. The mills, though built at several different periods, betray an admirable unity in design. The plant embodies more mechanical perfections than can be dealt with here. One automatic stop-device is almost superhuman in the certainty with which it throws spinning mechanism out of action on the breaking of a thread. Superfluous labor is econimized by trap-doors for raw materials, chutes for yarn, and hoppers for furnace coals.

PAQUET FURS SELL AND THEY STAY SOLD

ONCE more we have the pleasure of talking to you from the first page of this SPECIAL FUR SECTION. This time it is to remind you that PAQUET FURS are the furs that stay sold. There is no satisfaction in handling the other kind and no man with any consideration for his profits will continue to injure his business by selling goods that return to him in a few short weeks. There are other furs that are really quite satisfactory, but why experiment when you KNOW that PAQUET FURS are guaranteed to stay sold ?

"CARTER" and "WILKINSON"

The Hats That Are Known

WE have made the "CARTER" and "WILKINSON" Hats the best-known hats in Canada by an advertising campaign such as has never yet been equalled in this country for thoroughness. Besides the billboard or signboard advertising, which is well known to you and your customers, we have sent out an issue of 100,000 Hat Style-books to private individuals in all parts of Canada. These have been backed by strong newspaper advertising from Halifax to Vancouver, and we have a stock of the right sort of newspaper cuts for the use of dealers handling these Hats. If you are not now on our visiting list, drop us a line and you will be on immediately.

THE CANADIAN FUR TRADE

A General Review of Conditions —Optimism in Manufacturing Circles—Some Selling Suggestions.

Furriers have strong confidence in the prospects for the coming season, owing to the country's continued prosperity and the fair agricultural conditions, and notwithstanding the tightness of the money market. Factories are actively engaged, and general advice given is to place sorting orders early, as there is often difficulty in moving full shipments.

The Fall and Winter Season.

Indications point to a strong demand on the part of the consumer, and a supply larger and more varied than ever is in evidence. The progressive merchant will be quick to take advantage of this most desirable situation.

The uncertainty coincident to the Summer months has given way to a certain steadiness, resulting from a definite outlook. In short, predictions are being realized, and the fruition time for the manufacturer and importer is approaching.

The furrier, in surveying his field, finds a good deal of uncertainty eliminated, and that a general sameness has disappeared, giving way to certain strong and attractive features. A heavy anticipated demand and abundant resources in the way of new and varied conceits in furs, with which to satisfy it, warrant a success considerably in excess of any former season.

Popular Furs.

Good furs are doing better than ever. Price is no object. Mink is given first place by every house. This fur is extremely high in price at present being fully fifteen to twenty-five per cent. higher than figures quoted a year ago. The price of skins particularly the fine specimens, is away beyond any figures before quoted in the history of the fur business. At the present writing, Persian lamb-skins are holding their own. This skin is extremely high in price, ad is somewhat scarce in the good qualities. It has advanced fully fifteen to twenty-five per cent. over last year. Although sable is quoted low, good skins neatly made up bring as good prices as last year. Lower grades are a trifle cheaper than last season. Muskrat is scarce and prices are high, as in comparison with coon skins. Marmot is another choice pelt in strong demand in many quarters. This fur is also high in price. While some of the furs above mentioned are scarce, in nearly every case the extremely high prices asked explain the scarcity. At the present day, any fur sold in Canadian markets can be had if wholesaelrs will pay the price asked.

If weather conditions are good, travelers will start on the road about the middle of the month. Merchants will do well to place orders early, so as to give wholesalers a chance to get goods made up in proper shape. Shrewd retailers, who have had extensive experience in the fur business, clearly recognize that early placing of sorting orders practically ensures the getting of better value. Sorting orders, if weather is at all favorable, of which there is every prospect, will be of large proportion, and to secure good value and prompt execution these should be in as early as demand will possibly warrant; in fact, trade should be anticipated, to some extent.

There are several reasons for urging early repeat orders, but, above all, the mere fact that the supply of skins in the Fall is necessarily well picked over, means that the later orders are delayed, the less the opportunity of securing a good assortment of skins to manufacture any article with. Further, factories are always rushed on orders up to the close of the year, and, as they are filled in rotation, early ones will secure best atention. Another point which always causes trouble during the Fall is the keen competition prevailing to secure and to keep competent help. The wages are forced up to high figures, and the cost of manufacture is considerably higher. This year some firms have made extra preparations to avoid these difficulties, and the grading of skins will be much better than in former seasons.

Scarcity of Skilled Labor.

The scarcity of skilled help is an important problem, which every wholesale manufacturer, not only in Montreal, but in every town and district throughout the Dominion, is forced to face each year, more especially during the Summer months. The trouble is caused by the fact that a great many of the female workers choose these months as marriageable ones or get tired of the business. Also, quite a few of the male employes drift into other trades. The consequences are that as soon as every factory in Canada is in full swing, busy manufacturing for the coming season, in some cases there is not sufficient skilled help to carry on the business, when such people are most in need.

These troublesome circumstances can only be overcome in one way, and that is for the manufacturers in question to get together—if they don't they will be forced to it in time—to formulate plans for teaching young men and young women the fur business in their factories, and holding them there.

The present form of apprenticeship which exists with some firms in Canada, but more particularly in Montreal factories, is simply a farce. Owing to the scarcity of skilled labor, foremen of some fur factories will take on inexperienced help, teach them for six and seven months, and, in some cases, longer, paying them what their services are considered worth, only to find that as soon as these boys and girls obtain the least knowledge, and have the feeling that they know something of the fur business, they start looking around for positions that will pay them a few dollars per month more.

Owing to the conditions now prevailing, these manufacturers, to-day, are more than ever anxious to secure help, and the result is that the expert hands, who naturally drift away to other houses, have not been replaced.

The Catalogues Issued.

A noticeable feature, which deserves mention, is the elaborate and accurate catalogues of furs furnished to customers by a good many firms in the trade, with a view to aiding retailers in securing special orders and giving repeats. In a few cases, the cuts of garments are made direct from gods in stock, and these will prove very valuable.

Small Fur Pieces.

Fur shipments are now fairly well completed, and style conditions are accurately settled, so far as retailers are concerned. Compared with a year ago, styles in all kinds of neckpieces and muffs show no material change, muffs continue to be very large. The pillow muff is at present enjoying an exceptionally ready sale. A great many are plentifully covered with tail trimmings, and some are literally banked with them. Practically, every fur is represented, and the old staple furs are expected to sell as well as ever when repeats arrive. Stoles of mink, fox and lynx, while high in price, are also selling well, with double or triple ends of natural trimmings.

Heavy Coats Active.

Fur-lined jackets for ladies have proven stronger than a year ago. Furriers specializing on this type of garment have done considerable business. These jackets are usually trimmed with mink or sable. Men's fur-lined coats are also active, and are selling well in both the cheaper and expensive grades. These coats have otter or Persian lamb collars, and are generally lined with muskrat. Sales at retail of these garments should be better than even a year ago. They run at wholesale all the way from $30 to $125. The coon is ever staple and reliable.

Fashion favors furs more than ever this season, and every woman desires, no matter what her position in society, at least, some small piece of fur. Retailers should make every effort to get their share of lucrative trade.

At Edmonton recently one fur trader sold his pack for $15,811.

Displays and Advertising

There is Many a Sale Made Through Well Dressed Windows—Give Furs Good Newspaper Space.

Fur Displays.

To sell an article the merchant must first let the prospective customer know that there is such an article for sale. When he takes pains to display his stock, whether it be large or small, he generally receives his reward in good business. Consequently, there is nothing like letting the public know what he has. Too large a number of merchants do not wish to display their lines of furs on tables and racks for fear of moths. In this they may be wise to a certain degree, but when the goods are out in the air they look their best, and damage from moths can be prevented by frequent beatings. A good, safe method of display, however, is the showcase.

PERSIAN LAMB SET.

Necessity of Fur Windows.

At the beginning of the fur season, windows should be dressed, the more space given up to furs the better. There is many a sale made through a window which is attractively trimmed. Consequently, care should be exercised to make the window one which is sure to catch the eye of passer-by.

Advertising Furs.

From the beginning of the month till after the holiday season, special attention should be given to furs in advertising space. Particular mention should be made of the latest arrivals just before Xmas and New Year's.

A FINE CATALOGUE.

John W. Peck & Co., Montreal, Winnipeg, have issued a compact and useful catalogue, which for its size, is one of the most practical in the trade. It is 9x6 inches, and contains twenty-six pages. Further, it is accompanied by a price list, printed on good stock, and containing thirty-two pages. It is indexed, and when a certain style is seen in the catalogue there is no difficulty in finding the right range of prices. The catalogue reflects credit on its makers. Half-tones on heavily coated paper are used. The cuts illustrate the newest designs in fur caps, collars, gauntlets, muffs, ruffs, scarfs, stoles, collarettes, coats of all descriptions for men, ladies' jackets, ladies' fur-lined mantles, and robes. The usual self-measurement system is explained. The cover, in three colors, represents a buffalo out in the wilds. On the back is a good cut of John W. Peck & Co.'s Montreal factory. A copy will be cheerfully sent to any merchant interested.

BRERETON & MANNING'S CATALOGUE.

Brereton & Manning, 59-61 Wellington St. west, Toronto, have issued an exceedingly attractive catalogue. It contains thirty-two pages, and is a model of first-class typography throughout. The cuts are splendid, and are illustrative of all that is new in fur fashions. Directions for self-measurement are given. The firm will be pleased to mail one of these catalogues to merchants who are interested.

E. W. JACOB'S CATALOGUE.

The advent of the Fall catalogues depicting the various styles for the coming Winter, finds E. W. Jacobs & Co., of Montreal, in line. Their catalogue, in book form, 9x12 inches, containing a large number of engravings, printed on both sides of the paper, is calculated to set off clearly the lines of the new cuts, and also to give full expression to the tones of the furs. The catalogue is bound in a cover of heavy brown stock, on the front of which is engraved a large lion in a crouching position. Under each engraving is a short descriptive paragraph, giving a list of the furs in which the styles can be made.

TOURIST TRADE.

As outlined last month in The Review, the larger Canadian centres do an extensive fur business with tourists during the Summer period. The larger fur stores in Montreal, Toronto and Quebec were particularly active last month. In this connection the John Murhpy Co., Montreal, are worthy of imitation in their advertising. One of their fur advertisements appearing around the 1st of August is given on account of the excellence of the argument:

Furs in Summer

A great many people are interested in knowing why we should make such a great display of furs just now, when the weather is so warm. We do it for the benefit of the American visitors. They see a reason in the prices. As a young lady was overheard to say last night, "They're not half so high as they are in New York." Of course not.

Canada is the Fur Country.

You go to the tropics for one thing, to Ireland for another, and you come to Canada for furs. And in Canada Montreal ever was the centre of the fur trade; the history of the one is the history of the other; and in Montreal the fur interests centre at Murphy's just now.

Among visiting buyers in Montreal last month The Review noted J. C. Connolly, Yarker, Ont. Mr. Connolly was completing fur purchases, among other lines.

THE HAT TRADE IN SPLENDID CONDITION.

Summer stocks have been cleared out in good shape. This was assisted, of course, by cutting of prices, as is general towards the close of the season of active selling, but it must be apparent to every merchant that had bargain figures been delayed somewhat, sales would have been of less number, while returns would have been materially enhanced. There was an improvement in this respect over previous seasons, and the good results will encourage a further step in the right direction next year.

Wholesalers find trade satisfactory at present. The black, stiff hat is the big seller. The shapes have a tendency toward fullness in the crown and brims somewhat wider than Spring blocks. One of the noticeable novel features, which should take well in the young men's trade, is the introduction of buttons as trimmings on the bands of some hats.

The soft felts are not very popular at present. They show no special change of style over the blocks shown during the past Spring.

English golf caps in grey and mixed effects are selling well, as are also some novelties in motor shapes and other styles of good appearance.

Wholesalers are now busy shipping orders for Fall trade, and all indications point toward another good season.

Brown Hats for Fall.

With the return of brown suitings for Fall, has come the brown stiff hat, and an effort will be made to give it a place, at least in the better class trade. There will be some call for it, undoubtedly, but it is not likely to be large.

Spring Prospects Good.

The prospects for Spring, 1908, are very bright. Travelers are on the road, and all anticipate a large trade, owing to the prosperity of the country and the ever-increasing population.

In the straw lines for Spring the staple Canton sailor effects will again command a large share of public favor. The prices on this line range from $1 to $2.50. The Manila sailor, at $2 and $3.50, is also expected to be popular.

Children's sailors, with drops, run from 25 cents to $1 to the retailer. Business in this line is expected to be as good as ever. Boys' paletta hats, from 25 cents to $1.50, will also be good for Spring.

Prices on all straws are higher, with values not so good.

The black stiff hat is sure to retain its present standing in the trade. Medium flat brims will again predominate among the young men.

Panamas are also spoken of very favorably for next Summer. They can be secured in all shapes at from $3 to $15 apiece.

MACHINE FOR MEASURING HEADS.

"The machine that measures heads when hats are to be accurately fitted gives surprising revelations regarding the shape of people's skulls," said a hatter to an American journalist. "Ordinarily an odd-shaped skull must be very badly formed indeed before it attracts attention, for the flesh and hair make all skulls seem of the same shape, except when a man's head is very long or very round; but the machine has little sections, fitting closely to the skull, and reproducing in dotted lines on a piece of paper the exact outline. The ideal form of the skull is almost an oval, and we usually think of it as of that shape, so that when men come in and have their heads measured for a hat, they often look very much disgusted to find that their brain pans have a lump on one side, or a hole on the other, or are about twice as thick behind the ears as they are across the forehead. I lost one customer, a Broadway merchant, who insisted on having his skull measured and his hat fitted. He had been buying hats from me for ten years, and always had trouble with a new hat, until it fitted itself to the shape of his head. One day he saw the machine and determined to be measured and fitted. I tried to jolly him out of the notion, for I knew there must be something outlandish in the shape of his cranium, and was afraid he would get angry ; but he wouldn't be jollied, so at last I measured him, and of all the shapes you ever saw, that was about the worst. The outline looked like that of a football, half-full of air, and with one side kicked in. He looked at his cranium map, said a very bad word, walked out of the store and never came back. I didn't blame him much, for a man with a skull like that would naturally want to keep the fact to himself. He is dead now, poor fellow. Insane ? No. The shapes of people's skulls don't even seem to have anything to do with their brains."

ROYALTY AND MALE FASHIONS.

Time was when the King inevitably set the fashion in men's attire. Did His Majesty wear a new kind of hat or a fresh style in coats society men followed the next day. But nowadays the King does not go in so much for smartness and elegance of wear as for clothes best adapted for his figure. It has been noticed that of late he has been wearing a blue single-breasted frock-coat fastened with a link, but inquiries show that there has been no attempt to copy this lead, for the simple reason that the smart tailors consider this style only suitable for men of the King's build. A single-breasted frock-coat, they say, reduces the suggestion of embonpoint. The slender young men of society have, therefore, now to look for their lead in fashion to the Prince of Wales, whose dress is always the object of great admiration. In one respect, however, his illustrious father still holds the lead, and that is in regard to headgear. Let the King wear a new-shaped hat, and in a few days nearly every shop in Burlington Arcade will be stocked with the same pettern.—Manchester Evening News.

DRESS IN THE BRITISH HOUSE.

The House of Commons is not nearly so dressy as it was. Sober hues are the rule. No longer do Tory squires affect electric trousers, and "spats" have gone down to zero. Probably the large introduction of Labor representatives has produced a great effect on the number of silk hats. The "Labor man" avoids the "stove pipe." It is supposed to suggest "class" and ill-becoming of a democratic body. A son of toil with a glossy chapeau would look as much out of place as a guardsman with a bonnet-box.—London Opinion.

FUR NOTES.

The Redmond Co., St. Helen St., Montreal, expect to occupy their new warehouse in Inspector St. the 1st of the year. This building, as already pointed out in The Review, will be one of the largest and most modern fur and hat house in the Dominion.

Charles Coristine, fur manufacturer and hat and cap dealer, 92 McGill St., Montreal, who has been seriously ill with rheumatic fever for nearly five months, is again at his place of business, and is steadily improving in health.

Swift, Copland & Co., 478 St. Paul St., Montreal, have commenced work on their building, 517-525, farther west on the same street, which was gutted by fire early in the year. Decided improvements will be made to accommodate their growing business. They expect to occupy the new quarters during the early part of 1908.

S. T. Greenleese & Sons, the "Quality Fur House," have moved two doors further north in St. Helen St., occupying the entire building at No. 12 St. Helen St. This building has been lately rebuilt after a disastrous fire early in the year, and is now one of the finest warehouses and factory buildings in the Montreal wholesale district. This fur firm will have much needed increased facilities.

E. W. Jacobs & Co., now occupying premises at 20 Lemoine St., will move to larger and more commodious quarters at 309 Notre Dame St. west, Montreal, about the 1st of the year. This fine building has a frontage of 60 feet by a depth of 120 feet, and was one of the most modern warehouses in the city. Recently it was gutted by fire, but at the present time is rapidly being renovated.

SPECIAL TARIFF ON FRENCH SILKS.

A despatch from Paris, dated September 2, states that W. S. Fielding, Canada's Minister of Finance, left for London to lay the new commercial treaty between France and Canada before the British authorities. Afterwards Mr. Fielding will return to Paris to arrange minor details.

The Associated Press learns that the treaty is more elaborate than that of 1893, and not only provides for a reciprocal arrangement upon an increased number of commodities, but also commits itself to a general reciprocal doctrine designed to cover possible contingencies in the future.

Canada is unable to give France a more favorable duty on champagne than was allowed in 1893, but grants a special tariff on silks, and in return gets a minimum tariff on certain farm and forest products. The question as to the duty on Canadian wheat, on which the commissioners were divided, was finally settled by compromise.

MORE MERCHANTS HANDLING SUITS.

More and more merchants are taking an interest in the suit trade. Those who gave up this branch of the business some time ago are rapidly taking it up again, as they have learned to study the profits better. Manufacturers are assisting with mutual advantage. As a result, merchants have more confidence in stocking these lines.

STAPLES AND RAW MATERIALS

New Lines for 1908 Show Advances—Desirable Goods will be in Short Supply.

Most jobbers are still busy making delayed Fall shipments, as well as filling back orders. Sorting trade is picking up nicely. At present, the merchants, in general, seem to be prepared, and are willing to pay the advances in price asked, owing to the general depletion of stocks. One jobber's opinion regarding the cotton situation is to the effect that there is every indication of a shortage during October or November.

Canadian mills are actively considering the Spring season, and towards the end of August the absorbing topic of interest about the trade were the new Spring prices issued by the Canadian mills. While there are advances, broadly speaking, values compare fairly well with those issued a year ago. The strong demand for all lines of staple cottons, and the depleted condition of retailers' and jobbers' stocks, lends strength to the general belief that 1908 will prove a record year in Canadian cotton circles. While mills have not full orders in as yet, the strength of the situation is clearly shown by the size of the early orders. Jobbers do not wish to again experience a season of slow deliveries, and early orders when prices are assured is one of the sure ways of avoiding this contingency. As manufacturers are still busy with back orders, deliveries for Spring business are expected to be behind schedule, and those who again defer placing will find difficulty in obtaining supplies when most required.

Retailers, also, must clearly recognize that many of the new prices are exceedingly low, considering the high cost of production, which has been enhanced in Canada this season, and the precarious condition of the raw cotton market. As the new crop bids fair to be of fair proportions, values may ease somewhat in staples, yet mills cannot run from hand to mouth, and, although it is not likely that their full supplies have been contracted for, the greater part of their cotton has been bought at the high figures prevailing during the past year. With this in view, prices must be firm, and the steady demand and scarcity of desirable goods still further renders lower prices out of the question.

The usual lines are being shown, with a good assortment of new patterns, and travelers will soon be on the road. Those who have looked at the new range of samples state that they are far superior to anything yet shown.

Speculations, which were rampant during the past month, regarding the new Spring price list, have been finally settled by the textile people issuing their Colonial and Magog lists. The prices are generally regarded in the trade as favorable, taking into consideration the state of the raw cotton market. These prices, while higher than those ruling a year ago, are the best figures that can be quoted, allowing the manufacturer cover himself. No. 2 Indigo prints, selling last year at 8c., have been succeeded by an entirely new cloth, No. LL. While the No. 2 cloth was 27-28 inches, the new cloth is only 25-26 inches in width, but values are on a par with last season's line. No. 2 cloth has advanced to 9c. The textile people are again showing Standard Rock Fast Drill. Merchants should insist on buying this Canadian line, as it compares with any imported line on the market. This cloth, while selling at 12½c. last year, has only been advanced ½c. AA duck indigo, while quoted at 10c. last year, was advanced to 10½c. later, and for Spring is 11½c. Notwithstanding the rise, advance orders have been far ahead of last year. In specialty lines, the Persian lawn cloth, brought out this year, is entirely different from last season. The patterns show a decided improvement.

Among Colonial lines issued for the new season, No. HP prints, in all varieties of colors, sold a year ago at 8c., and then shortly after withdrawn from the market, is now quoted at 10c., and the demand is quite active.

Among flannelette lines, the outing flannel, 27-28 in., is quoted at 11½c. for the new season. This line has many fine and novel patterns. Many new lines have been brought out over those shown one year ago.

Spring Ginghams.

The manufacturers of all lines of ginghams are now booking orders from the wholesale trade for Spring, 1908. Business is expected to be good, as most stocks are well depleted, owing to increased demand and general scarcity. Manufacturers are still busy on old orders, and, as a result, when Spring business is in full swing deliveries may be somewhat late. Those who put off placing will be sure to find a difficulty in obtaining supplies when most required.

THE SILK PROSPECT.

Referring to this important subject, the Japan Chronicle, a good authority upon trade matters, says: "The export of raw silk is a most important element of the financial question. The result of sericulture this year has been exceptionally successful, and the output of silk cocoons has shown an excess of over 20 per cent. over the average, while the raw silk market is ruling very high. The No. 1 quality of best Shinshu silk, which is the standard of the silk market, is quoted at $620 per picul (133 pounds), against $515 of last year. The favorable market of the new silk will undoubtedly give an incentive to sericulturists, who may raise more silk worms in the summer and autumn; and if these two crops prove as successful as the spring crop, Japan may have silk to sell to the amount of upwards of $100,000,000 this year. In that case, it will be more than enough to compensate for the excess of imports, $32,875,000, during the first half year, with the result of great trade activity."

Carpets

Fall Suggestions for Retailers—Trade More Active Than Usual—English Carpet Conditions.

The first few days of September have shown a gratifying activing in retail carpet trade. The close of Summer is always looked forward to by retailers as a time when business should naturally assume larger proportions, but this year the increase has come somewhat earlier than was expected; in fact, the carpet situation in some of the large departmental stores has never been better in years, having continued active throughout the Summer months. The opening of the thousands of homes throughout the country naturally stimulates refurnishing in many directions, and to this can be attributed the increased demand for all grades of carpets and rugs.

During the present month the Fall carpet season will open up, and will continue for about eight or nine weeks. The volume of business done at this time of the year is of varying proportions, some merchants asserting that their trade is usually very satisfactory, while others do such a small amount as not to feel encouraged to buy in any large quantity.

The number of carpet sales during the season depends, to some extent, upon the district, but more of them are due to the attitude of the merchant than he is willing to allow. The stock that is not replenished is sure to meet with poor sales, irrespective of the demand in the community. His heedlessness to possible demand and his lack of preparation for it, will discourage a good deal of what might come his way.

This does not mean that a man should buy heavily if he knows that the demand will not, under any circumstances, be more than fair, but he should figure out if something cannot be done to increase the activity of his department. It is altogether likely that if a few more pieces were added to the stock remaining from Spring sales would be much larger.

The Fall season can be used to dispose of Spring remnants, but these pieces will never sell so well as when assorted with new goods. Special sales of remnants constitute a good way to attract customers to the advantages of buying at this time.

Wholesalers state that Fall business has been exceedingly active, notwithstanding the large advances throughout the year. Tapestries, in the cheaper grades, ranging in price from 32½ cents to 70 cents, and Wiltons and Axminsters averaging $1.30 per yard, have sold well.

At the present writing nearly all wholesalers have placed orders for Spring, 1908.

Owing to recent advances, tapestries that could be bought for 57½ cents or 60 cents, cannot be touched less than 65 cents for Spring. This advance averages fifteen per cent. higher than last season's goods. The increased prices are sure to affect retail trade to the extent that wholesalers will cover themselves accordingly.

Fawns and greens continue to hold first position as regards colors, with only a small demand for red. Blue is behind schedule.

Canadian carpet manufacturers are busy in the completion of new designs for Spring trade. Towards the end of the month travelers will be on the road and the carpet season will again be in full swing. Many new designs in popular colors will be in vogue, and at the present writing everything looks bright for another fine season.

English manufacturers state that most wholesale houses here have placed orders for next season, and they are about the average in all lines. Rugs and squares have also sold well. The principal colors which have been bought are greens and fawns. Blues, as with the Canadian manufacturers, are behind schedule, while there is only a fair demand for reds.

Prices have been well maintained and it is quite possible they may go higher. Deliveries from the manufacturers are expected to be bad owing to the increased output.

Rugs

Have a Well Assorted Stock—These Goods in Greater Demand Than Ever Before.

Retailers who, in the past, have confined their attentions chiefly to a few cheap rugs, are beginning to realize the advantage of a well-kept stock—an assortment of the cheaper lines, and also the introduction of such better grades as their trade will accept. Those who ordered safely during Spring months for Fall delivery are finding steady sales in all grades. Light colors have been bought freely, except, of course, in Turkish and Oriental designs, where the ever-staple colors are blue, red and old gold.

Canadian manufacturers are busy just now, and have been throughout the Summer months, turning out rugs for Spring, 1908, trade. Many pretty designs in florals will be shown by the travelers in light, soft shades of green, fawn and golden brown.

As rugs are selling better than ever merchants wishing to procure a good select stock should order early, as deliveries for Spring, 1908, are sure to be behind schedule.

There is an increased demand for carpet squares. Those in tapestry, Brussels, Wiltons and Axminsters have all been bought freely. The most popular sizes range from 90x60 to 13.6x106. Greens and fawns, as in three-quarter piece goods, predominate, and prices have advanced in accordance with carpets.

Oilcloths and Linoleums

Canadian manufacturers of oilcloths and linoleums have widened their range considerably for the new season. In linoleums travelers are showing the staple bathroom patterns, and many pretty hardwood floor effects, besides the finest range yet of block and floral patterns. There is also an excellent showing of inlaid tiling effects.

In floor oilcloths the most extensive range yet shown to the trade contains a big proportion of reds and greens.

Imported lines of oilcloths and linoleums for Spring are expected to sell as well as ever. The designs continue to show improvement. A good business is looked for by all wholesalers handling these goods.

Prices of these lines continue firm, with other advances looked for, in some cases before the arrival of Spring. Deliveries are expected to be on time.

Wall Paper

Have your demonstration table in a light favorable to the papers. It often happens that the good points in a design go unappreciated on account of a bad light. Seeing that wall paper in place is in rooms, the light for demonstration purposes should not be too strong. Generally speaking, the demonstration table should be placed about eight feet away from a medium-sized window, exactly opposite it, and should be viewed by the customer from near the window.

Points in a Wallpaper Ad.

The other day a traveler for a well-known household necessity was heard to remark: "No man need apply for a job around our place who doesn't believe in advertising, unless he keeps his belief to himself. If he said anything in disparagement of advertising, the manager would throw him out." Now the firm represented by this traveler has built up an enormous business upon a foundation of advertising, and the main point in all their advertising has been and still is—quality. That firm's success is the strongest argument possible in advertising goods on their points of quality.

It is a well known maxim among advertising men, that in retail advertising, price should never be left out. Price, indeed, is the most important point in bringing the customer into the store. But it is a point that, in wall paper advertising, should be used as a sort of final rap. Make it appear that the price is a marvellous one when the quality of the article is considered.

Quality in wall paper is, of course, made up of several things, such as color harmony, exclusiveness of design and durability. In the ad., therefore, some or all of these points should invariably be the theme. First tell your prospective customers what the good points of your wall paper are, then tack on the price.

It is doubtful if illustrations are of much value in retail advertising, inasmuch as it is impossible to give any idea of the color effects of a design in a newspaper ad. As eye-catchers, of course, illustrations are always valuable, and are just as valuable in wall paper, as in any other kind of advertising. It is as well, if possible, to have the eye-catcher appropriate to the subject of the ad.

The high grade of wall paper, both of the cheaper and expensive varieties, turned out by our domestic manufacturers to-day, sells readily. Salesmanship, however, is required in order to sell the grades in which there is most profit for the retailer. He must endeavor to analyze a design, so to speak, and be in a position to explain the excellent points of any design which seems to take the customer's fancy. A neat line of conversation upon the subject of wall paper designs, and their appropriateness for this, that, and the other room, or hallway, has a tendency to bolster up a customer's wavering decision to buy. Lots of people are quite unable to decide what they want without some aid. And the retailer who makes the most money is invariably the man who is able to talk interestingly to his customers of their needs in his line of business. A wall paper salesman, to be really successful. must know wall paper, and be able to advise and assist his customers to choose designs which will give them satisfaction.

WINDOW SHADES ADVANCED.

At the beginning of last month Canadian manufacturers of window shades made a revision of prices. Water colors were advanced 20 cents per dozen, and machine made oils 25 cents per dozen. The cause of this advance is the continued upward tendency of the cotton market, and increased cost of labor.

Comparing conditions with those in the market across the line, Canadian prices still remain fair. Prices in the United States market have advanced fully fifty per cent. in the past nine months.

JAP MATTINGS.

Many wholesalers have placed strongly on these lines, owing to the high prices of the cheapest grades of carpets. They expect the demand for these goods to be heavier than ever on this account. Mattings have experienced a slight advance, about five per cent. They can be secured from wholesalers at from 10½ cents up.

STRIKE OF COTTON MILL OPERATORS.

On August 15 over two thousand operators of the Montreal Cotton Co.'s mills at Valleyfield quit work without warning. They demanded an increase of ten per cent. in their wages. At first the officials of the company were opposed to making any concessions, but as the strikers showed determination the officials granted the mule spinners an increase of ten per cent., in order that operations might be resumed. The mule spinners at first appeared to be perfectly satisfied with the company's offer, but after a conference held subsequently between committee and officials of the general body of operators, the mule spinners informed the officers of the company that they would not resume work unless a general increase of ten per cent., for all classes of operators, were agreed to.

After many stormy meetings and consultations, and after remaining out for nearly two weeks, the operators of the company decided to return to work, as merchants in Valleyfield refused to allow credit any longer.

The strike ended by the mule spinners receiving a ten per cent. increase in wages, they consenting to the proposal of having all other demands submitted to arbitration under the terms of the Lemieux Act.

Slow shipments of all cotton lines will be delayed somewhat longer owing to the strike just concluded, but, practically speaking, the trade in general will only be slightly affected, as the trouble was brought to a conclusion quickly.

Jamieson & Rothwell have purchased the general store business of Hamelin Bros. & Co. in Arcola.

MONTREAL

Calgary Department Store

A Calgary paper states that a departmental store will be established in that city. Work on the building, which is to be five-storeys high, and of reinforced concrete, will be started about December 1. It is expected that it will be ready for business by April or May. The concern will be known as The Dominion Stores, Limited. The prospectus states that Calgary offers the best location in Canada for a business of this kind.

The store will make a feature of its mail order department.

The building to be erected will represent an outlay of a million dollars.

The names of the promoters of this enterprise have not as yet been made public. To The Review, it seems not unlikely that one of the big Toronto stores may be interested in it.

JUST HIS LUCK.

"Hello!" said Borem, "I just thought to drop in on you to-day to——"

"I thought you would, too," interrupted the merchant.

"You did? Now, that's strange, because——"

"Not at all; this is the busiest day I've had for weeks."

Thomas Mulcahy, of Orillia, will extend his business into a departmental store, carrying dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, etc.

Trade Inquiries

Since the publication of the last report there have been received the following inquiries relating to the Canadian dry goods trade. The names of the firms making these inquiries, with their addresses, can be obtained upon application to "Superintendent of Commerce, Ottawa." Please quote the reference number when requesting addresses.

850. Cottons, woolens, hardware, etc., etc.—A London agent offering good references in London and Manchester, desires appointment as buying agent or representative for first-class Canadian firms dealing in cottons, woolens, hardware, metals, jute, ropes and chains, as well as German, French and Spanish goods.

851. Representative.—Inquiry is made by a correspondent respecting the possibility of obtaining an appointment as buying representative in London for Canadian dry goods establishments.

854. Sacking.—A Dundee firm interested in the manufacture of sacking, and in flax, hemp and jute textiles generally, desires to get into correspondence with Canadian importers.

876. Carpets.—A Yorkshire manufacturing firm asks for actual Canadian buyers of their Chenille-Axminster, Brussels, Wilton, Kidderminster and Dutch carpets ; also for horse rugs and underfelt for carpets.

887. Hats, felt and straw.—A London company manufacturing felt and straw hats, wishes to get into communication with buyers in Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa, Hamilton, London, Halifax, St. John, N.B., and Edmonton.

921. Post Cards.—Leeds firm, specializing in photographic goods, is prepared to print quantities of photographic post cards of any subject, and invites correspondence from Canadian stationers, wholesale houses, photographers and others interested.

922. Flags.—Old established firm in the north of England, who are actual manufacturers of high-quality flags and bunting, will be pleased to tender for Canadian orders, they also desire to negotiate with suitable connections in different parts of Canada.

GARMENT WORKERS' STRIKE.

On August 20 two hundred and fifty garment workers in Montreal, employed in the clothing establishments of H. Kellert & Co., and Standard Cloak and Skirt Manufacturing Co., went on strike, demanding better hours and more money, with abolition of piece-work. Following were the demands made by the strikers : 1, Abolition of piece-work system ; 2, fifty-five hours for men and fifty-one hours for women to constitute a week's work ; 3, work to be paid on a sliding scale basis ; 4, wages to be made up by competent foremen, and all work to be taken out of hands of contractors.

The settlement of the strike, brought to a close Thursday, the 29th of August, was effected by an agreement between the employers and strikers, in which the employers promised to give the garment workers an increase in wages, varying in accordance to position held. They, however, refused to recognize the union.

Garment houses in Montreal interviewed, spoke strongly of the effect these strikes would have upon the trade if continued for any length of time. If the unions were forced to become incorporated, then they could be held responsible.

Maritime Board of Trade Meeting

Many Important Matters Discussed—A Splendid Gathering—Improvement of Transportation Facilities—The All-Red Line.

The annual meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade was held at St. John, N.B., on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, August 21, 22 and 23. The attendance at this, the thirteenth meeting, was large and representative, and included many leaders of commerce and industry in the provinces.

The most striking matter at the opening of the meeting was the passing of a resolution endorsing the recommendation of the colonial conference in favor of the All Red Line. This was carried unanimously.

Mayor Sears, after a few preliminary remarks of welcome, said he thought in looking over the list of subjects to be discussed, that technical education was one of the most important.

The secretary-treasurer reported, among other things, that the local government and the government of Nova Scotia were about to secure a site for a technical institute in New Brunswick.

President W. S. Fisher's address was mainly a review of the commercial and industrial situation in Canada. Some subjects taken up were : Fruit farming, cold storage, fishing. mining, transportation, the building of the west, the All Red Line, agricultural development, dairy ing, immigration, technical education, federal insolvency law, etc. Regarding technical education, he said, in part: "To train boys and girls in merely literary accomplishments, to the exclusion of industrial, manual and technical training, tends to unfit them for industrial work, and in real life most work is industrial. The calling of the skilled tiller of the soil or of the skilled mechanic, should be recognized, just as emphatically as the calling of the lawyer, the banker or the merchant. The abandonment of the old apprentice system has resulted in a great scarcity of trained mechanics, and this lack must be made up by the trade school, if we are to hold our own in industrial pursuits. Nova Scotia is moving in the right direction, through the Government Agricultural Institute, already established, and the Technical College about to be. Sir William Macdonald has done much for the country, in establishing in each province consolidated schools, with excellent teachers, aad departments devoted to manual training, domestic science and school gardens, supplemented by careful indoor studies in agricultural and other lines."

With respect to an insolvency law, President Fisher said : "I wish to draw attention to the need that exists for a general insolvency law, that will apply to the whole Dominion, looking to the proper protection of creditors, and to the equitable distribution of insolvent estates. This is becoming more urgent as trade develops between the different sections of the country. Those firms who are doing business in every province, find the present system very troublesome, and the number of these is increasing rapidly. The present laws are inadequate. The merchant wants no uncertainty as to his rights, and at present there is such, owing to the variety of laws in existence in the different provinces."

H. J. Logan, M.P. for Cumberland County, N.S., in a brief speech, said that the Maritime Provinces should be drawn more closely together than they are at present.

A resolution was passed, to the effect that the Federal Government see that subsidized steamers plying between the ports of Prince Edward Island and Sydney, and of Newfoundland, be equipped with cold storage facilities.

The subject of the Dominion Government taking over the railways of western Nova Scotia, and making them part of the Intercolonial system, was discussed. Hon. H. R. Emmerson was quoted as advocating the extension of the I. C. R., by taking in branch lines, and claimed that the pro rata cost of the western lines was below that of any of the other railways in Canada. It was pointed out that only three freight trains a week passed between Digby and Yarmouth. A resolution was passed urging the Federal Government to take the necessary steps to acquire these railways at a reasonable price.

Hon. George E. Hughes presented a resolution asking for an improvement in the express rates as now in force in Prince Edward Island. The Canadian Express Company is now, he said, the only company doing business there and it has a monopoly.

Other members cited instances of unfair express charges. One advocated that the resolution be enlarged, so as to recommend that the I. C. R. grant running rights to all express companies. It was also suggested that all subsidzed steamers as well as railways be included.

A resolution was presented by W. B. Snowball, of Chatham, recommending "that this board is of the opinion that the importation of pulpwood should be prohibited by the Federal Government." The spirit of the resolution is, that a prohibitive export duty be put on pulpwood, so that United States manufacturers would be induced to come here instead of taking the wood across the line.

Mr. Andrews, of Sackville, showed the board a piece of black made from pulpwood. He thought there was a possibility, some time in the future, of Canada manufacturing goods of that kind.

A resolution was submitted, to the effect that a fisheries board be appointed along the lines of the fishing board of Scotland, to act under the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for the regulation and control of the Canadian Atlantic fisheries. Another resolution followed this one, in regard to the preservation of the lobster fisheries. Both were passed.

Mr. Wilson, of Yarmouth, brought up the matter of the abrogation of the modus vivendi, and submitted a report reaffirming the resolution of last year, which was referred to a committee. This report read : "Your committee on the modus vivendi beg leave to report that it is highly in the interests of the Canadian Atlantic fisheries that the Dominion Government abrogate the same, until such time as the Government of the United States is disposed to negotiate a new treaty."

George Robertson, M.P.P., in introducing several resolutions said, in part : "We must take a grip on this enormous depletion of our Maritime Provinces." He rose to heights of eloquence in referring to that section of Canada as a home for settlers.

F. L. Potts, of St. John, said that the cost of living in the Maritime Provinces had increased fifty per cent. of late years. What was most needed was more industries.

Mails at Sydney.

H. F. McDougall, of Sydney, then brought up the question of the landing of mails at Sydney. He referred to the success of the various trials of landing the mails at Sydney, and the speedy distribution of these mails. Sydney, therefore, looked for the support unaminously of the three Maritime Provinces in reference to the use of Sydney as the mail port of call, during the open navigation season.

Running Rights for C.P.R.

He then presented the following resolution :

Whereas, Several experiments have been made in the transfer of the English mails to and from Canada at Sydney harbor ;

And whereas, These experiments have demonstrated beyond doubt that by the Sydney route the English and European mails can be delivered to all points in Canada earlier than by any other route ;

And whereas, It is the general belief that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as well as the Allan Company, are opposed to the landing and embarking of mails and passengers at Sydney, and prefer, during the navigation of the St. Lawrence, landing mails and passengers at Quebec ;

And whereas, It is inconsistent with reason that Canada should continue to subsidize a mail and passenger service to run parallel with the Government system of railway over a distance of some 800 miles, and thereby delay for many hours the delivery of mails ;

And whereas, The Maritime Provinces are deeply interested in the landing of mails and passengers at Sydney during the season of St. Lawrence navigation and until such time as a more permanent and definite service is established ;

And whereas, The C.P.R. system is more closely interested and connected with this traffic than any other in Canada, the Sydney Board of Trade, after due consideration, express the opinion that the privilege of running rights over the Intercolonial from St. John to Sydney, to the C.P.R., would greatly facilitate the adoption of the Sydney route ;

Therefore, resolved, That this Maritime Board of Trade recommend the granting of such running rights for mails and passengers to the C.P.R. from St. John to Sydney ;

Further resolved, That this Board reaffirm the resolution passed at the annual meeting last year at Amherst recommending that the Government of Canada insist that all mails to and from Canada by the St. Lawrence be transferred at Sydney.

The resolution was carried.

It was resolved, "That in the opinion of this Board the Government be, and is hereby, requested to so equalize the three short-hauls system of transportation of P. E. Island, with the continuous haul of the other provinces with which it is in competition ; that P. E. Island be placed on the same basis as to import and export rates to and from ports outside of Canada as are accorded to the other provinces of the Dominion."

This resolution was passed, as was also one recommending that steps should be taken at once, by changing the route where necessary, by reducing curves and grades, and by double-tracking, to put those portions of the I.C.R. in a proper condition to become part of a great transcontinental railway system.

It was resolved, "That this Board does hereby reaffirm its resolution passed unanimously at Yarmouth, in 1905, and reaffirmed at Amherst in 1906, asking for the speedy construction of a tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland."

A. E. McMahon presented a resolution recommending "that all steamship companies receiving subsidies from the Dominion Government be obliged to advertise rates for carriage of goods to foreign ports, and that such rate shall be subject to and under the control of the Railway Commission, and that any steamship company departing from such advertised rates shall be deprived of said subsidy." This is calculated to stop rebating. It was passed.

Grants to Shipbuilders.

Shipbuilding and a bonus was brought up by the Halifax Board. J. E. De Wolfe, of Halifax, presented the following resolution, which was seconded by Geo Robertson, and adopted :

"Whereas, The substitution of steel for wood in the construction of ships has reduced Canada from her position as one of the four greatest shipbuilding and shipowning countries of the world to a place amongst the most unimportant ;

"And, whereas, Her coast line on two oceans of over two thousand (2,000) miles, with enormous lake and river navigation leading to the interior of the continent, has produced not only a great coastwise and foreign trade, but a large population skilled in maritime affairs ;

"And, whereas, Canada possesses all the natural facilities and materials for the production of steel vessels, but is prevented from utilizing them by reason of the skill and capital employed in British yards, which have established England's supremacy in this industry, the products of which are admitted free to our coastwise as well as foreign trade ;

"And, whereas, The above conditions prove that Canada can never regain her position as a maritime country unless the Government offers inducements by bonus or otherwise to shipbuilding companies to establish that industry ;

"And, whereas, Several municipalities and Boards of Trade in the Maritime Provinces have memorialized the Dominion Government to grant aid to the industry by means of bonus or otherwise ;

"And, whereas, A similar memorial from parties interested in this industry in Canada has also been presented to the Government ;

"Therefore, resolved, That the Maritime Boards of Trade hereby endorse and approve the principle of a bonus to steel shipbuilding as offering a new and profitable field for the utilization of our steel products, the employment of skilled labor, and, more than all, in the creation of a new mercantile marine, which was formerly a great source of wealth to our country ;

"And, further resolved, That this Board urges the Government to pass necessary legislation at the next session of Parliament, granting a bonus to steel shipbuilding within the Dominion."

It was resolved that the former rates prevailing, before the recent increase, on Canadian newspapers going to the United States, be restored.

Following are the officers for the ensuring year :—President. A. M. Bell, Halifax ; first vice-president, Hon. Geo. E. Hughes, Charlottetown ; second vice-president, W. B. Snowball, Chatham ; secretary, E. A. Saunders, Halifax ; permanent secretary-treasurer, Chas, M. Creed, Halifax ; auditor, M. G. De Wolfe, Kentville ; committee —A. E. Burke (chairman), W. L. Loggie, E. H. Armstrong, J. E. De Wolfe.

The financial statement showed a balance of $106.52.

Charles Ogilvy's new store, in Ottawa, was opened on August 6. It is a splendid structure, and the equipment throughout is right up to date.

Men's Furnisher and Clothier

Ready-to-Wear Clothing

The Goods That Most Closely Approach Fine Custom Tailored Garments Are the Ones to Handle.

Last Winter being long and severe, retailers generally cleared out their stocks pretty well, and, in consequence, placed good orders for Fall. If the coming season is favorable, an excellent sorting trade may be anticipated.

Merchants are coming to see more clearly the possibilities of the ready-to-wear clothing trade, and, accordingly, are looking around for lines that will bring them both profit and reputation. It will pay them well to give a lot of study to this department, for, with proper management, it is bound to grow steadily.

The product of Canadian manufacturers is improving each season, and will, undoubtedly, continue to do so. Some of them are now turning out garments that closely approach the work of good custom tailors in design and fit. Those are the goods that a retailer finds most profitable.

Fall Neckwear Trade

The Better Grades Receiving Increased Attention—The Popular Colors and Widths—Watch for Novelties.

The Fall Neckwear is commanding splendid business, and the better grades are more active than ever. The number of cansumers who are willing to pay from 75 cents to $1.50 for a real good article is increasing rapidly. One thing that is assisting this condition very materially, is the fact that silk prices have made it necessary to cut down the quality of 50 cent lines. These latter have long been most popular with the great majority of people. Now that their quality is much inferior to what it formerly was, they have been dropped by many. When it is considered that after being worn a very few times their appearance suffers to a marked extent, it is not to be wondered that particular dressers should prefer lines which, while costing two or three times as much, retain their good looks two or three times as long. The merchant who recognizes this tendency, and caters to it, will find his profits augmented and his reputation enhanced.

The principal colors appearing in the range now being shown the trade are brown, navy, green, blue, purple, pearl, smoke and wine. Some of the designs are exceedingly pretty.

Four-in-hands still hold the market, with the ascots making no attempt to claim a share of the public favor. The latter are a dead letter just now, and will not be seen in any number until Fall, 1908, at any rate.

The width most favored this Fall is two and a half inches. Some of two inches are being asked for, as well as a few of three inches. By far the greater volume of business will be done in the medium width. In some quarters there is a feeling for still smaller ones, but this is very limited, as it must necessarily continue to be while waistcoats are made with the large opening.

Light browns will be in fair demand, and the lines that have been shown are certainly attractive. However, The Review still believes that some manufacturers are much too sanguine regarding the prospects in this direction. Navies will do much better, and it is likely that the polka dot will come in for a good deal of attention.

One loud color that has been put out is Alice blue. It may sell in a certain class of trade, but it would make the ordinary person's eyes ache to look at it for long. Quiet shades maintain their popularity, but they surely will have run their race by a year from now. A few more lively colors are looked for in the Spring lines.

Merchants should watch closely for the novelties that will make their appearance during the next couple of months. These often make splendid window draws, and they always help to give a stock an appearance of brightness and newness. Of course, only limited quantities of each should be purchased.

Shirts for Spring

Prices and Qualities—The Desirability of Placing Orders Early—Favored Colors.

Travelers are out with shirt lines for Spring, 1908, and while prices quoted show no change, there is a noticeable falling off in values.

At the risk of being charged with repetition, The Review again counsels retailers to "trade up," that is, try to sell higher-priced lines than they have handled heretofore. That it will pay them well to do so seems too obvious to be dwelt upon. A customer who has been accustomed to purchasing a cheap line will find a good deal to dissatisfy him when he comes to wear that same line now. He may imagine that he is getting the same article, but is bound to find out the difference. Some merchants neglect to explain the situation in making a sale, whereas if they did do so, and emphasized the desirability of buying garments in which quality would surely be secured, a lot of trouble could be avoided. They would make more money and customers would think better of them and their goods. Instances have several times been described in these columns of retailers with whom lines at $1 and $1.50 were the best sellers some time ago, now doing a large trade on lines as high as $2.50. Apart from the quality consideration, the prosperity of the country makes it easier for people to buy a finer class of merchandise than ever before.

There is nothing particularly striking about the designs or colorings that are being shown. Beige and light tans should be strong sellers. White grounds with neat designs will command a big call. Different from the condition across the line, the colorings will be quiet and refined. American journals state that indications for Spring point to a revival of "noisy" shades.

Every merchant should stock soft shirts, but whether he buys most strongly in those with attached or those with detached cuffs depends upon his customers. For general trade The Review favors the latter, but every store should have a representation of the former as well.

"The Leader" Rainproof Coat. Shown by The W. R. Brock Co., Toronto.

Place orders early. You may take this as the very best of advice. Deliveries during the past year have been slow, and there is little chance of improvement. Wholesalers have been having a great deal of difficulty in this respect. In one house The Review was told of an order for ten lines, upon only two of which delivery had been secured. This case gives a good indication of the prevailing condition.

An English men's wear journal advises its readers to push the sale of soft front shirts all the year round. In this The Review entirely disagrees with it for reasons that have several times been explained.

The Chinese Tailor

A Comparison Between the East and West—Chinese Tailors Have No Originality, But Are Good Copyists.

In one of his lesser known works the elder Dumas tells the story of a Chinese tailor who, given an old pair of trousers as a pattern, did his work so well as to reproduce every detail with absolute fidelity, even to a patch in the seat of the originals. Whether Dumas claimed the story as his own the writer does not recollect, but it certainly is an ancient chestnut in the east, and, further, like many such, is highly colored with improbability. True, the Chinese do at times interpret foreign instructions in an absurdly literal fashion, but it is perfectly safe to credit the native tailor with the same amount of honesty and intelligence as is readily conceded to his brethren in the west. This is supported in part by the fact that officers in the mercantile marine trading to China frequently take out materials to be made up there, and their still commoner practice of repleting diminished wardrobes with Chinese-made clothing; and in part by the reluctance of persons who have lived long in the east, but residing in England, not parting altogether with their Chinese tailor, sending him occasional orders, which, no doubt, is done more from motives of personal comfort than from any desire for sartorial splendor. In any other but a free-trade country this would involve some pecuniary sacrifice, and as it is its economy is open to question; but it is a fact bearing strongly in favor of Chinese workmanship all the same.

Like his brother, the dressmaker, the Chinese tailor is quite void of originality, incapable of startling the world of fashion, indifferent to any personal preferences or ideas, save those conveyed by his fashion-plates. Of these he is a careful collector from the British and American trade periodicals, although, often enough, he is a little "shaky" in the matter of chronological sequence. This, surely, is pardonable in a country where the shape and make of the clothing of both sexes has undergone no change for centuries. Nevertheless, he is quick to recognize that the foreigner is on a footing altogether different from that of the native. He is a being of whims and fancies, but prepared to pay for their gratification. There are not in the east, in China, at any rate, those variations in cut to which competent tailors in the west are accustomed. Suits of white drill or flannel (of which one needs at least a dozen), made upon one plan, are the Summer wear; but the cooler and Winter seasons provide the tailor with opportunities for showing what he can do in the making of clothes to combat frequent abnormal oscillations of temperature. Then his fashion plates and patterns are displayed with manifest pride before customers, and, did his features express what he felt—which they never do—they would indicate the self-sufficiency and sense of security from foreign competition in ministering to foreign wants, and satisfaction with the steady profitable stream of foreign business which duly irrigates his own and kindred businesses.

In the big foreign stores European cutters are always employed at salaries which would appear fabulous to the Chinese were he not already acquainted with the vast difference in price between imported labor and the native article, but he must derive some consolation from the proven fact that the barbarian with the chalk and shears can teach him very little he does not know of the scientific and economical treatment of a roll of cloth. COLOSSUS

SHIRTS AND OVERALLS

We wish to announce to the shirt and overall trade throughout the country that our new range of "COLOSSUS" brand garments for Spring 1908 is now complete, and can be seen at any wholesale establishment in Canada.

The range comprises fine negligee shirts in all the best materials, and latest patterns and designs; working shirts, overalls and smocks. No expense has been spared to make this the best range ever shown in the lines covered by "COLOSSUS" brand. Whether we have succeeded or not will be for the sales to determine, and if our sales record for last season can be taken as any index of what we may expect this year, it behooves you to get busy if you want your orders filled.

The reception given "COLOSSUS" garments in the past has amply repaid us for the trouble and expense entailed in getting out a garment that in Size, Quality, Fit and Finish is unequalled by anything in the shirt and overall business.

We adopted the "COLOSSUS" brand to represent our best efforts in the making of high-class garments, and the results have justified our belief that the consuming public were willing to buy a high-class, roomy, well-made, standardized garment in preference to cheaper grades.

sides, it is his own countrymen who make up the clothes after all—the native needleman whence all Chinese master tailors have originally sprung.

The Chinese tailor—i.e., one who makes clothes for foreigners (this definition including all persons not Chinese)—usually begins his career as an apprentice in the workroom of a compatriot, where he starts at nominal wages, pays a premium, and gives a feast to his fellow workmen. As in Europe, the tailor serves his time, but his usefulness matures at a much earlier age than with us. When he has learned his trade, if he has not already secured some interest in his master's business, he will set up for himself in a very small way on borrowed capital, and start out heavily handicapped in this way; and yet cheerfully contending against the lethargy of his customers in settling their accounts—an exotic, by the way, which flourishes in the east as luxuriantly as in the lands of Christendom. By hook or by crook, but chiefly by long and patient labor, he rears his business into definite shape, and the first visible feature of its existence is a collection of miscellaneous rubbish which qualifies him to style himself an "outfitter." Finally, his apprentices, mostly sons or nephews, contribute materially to his improving circumstances.

Long hours are worked, for the shop opens at seven in the morning, and seldom closes before eleven; nor does work cease with the putting up of the shutters. The working week is of seven days, and there are no holidays, except at China New Year or on the death of the master or a member of his family. No school board officer inquires into the ages of his extremely youthful, but often skilful, apprentices; nor is there any trouble on the score of sobriety, the Chinese being practically a tectotal race. All work as in one common cause; all appear to be happy together, which very desirable state of things may be attributed to the vast difference between the relations of employer and employed in the east and in the west. The Chinese master tailor not only works with his men, but he sits down at the same table with them, joins in the jokes and puts his views into the common pool.

Of course, differences of opinion do arise between masters and men, and trades unionism being older, stronger, and better organized in China than in any other country in the world, the men often win; but, then, it should be explained that the point at issue is generally a very reasonable cause of complaint. Whether the men or the masters be worsted, the result is the same for the foreigner—increased charges.

Shortly put, enhanced cost of living has resulted in the natural demand for increased wages. But let no one take comfort from a fall in the price of rice; so profound is the veneration for precedent in China, that an increased price for a given article for foreign consumption ever after becomes the minimum.

Of the character of Chinese tailoring the writer, not being an expert, is unable to speak, except from the point of view of a satisfied customer; but he has submitted native-made garments to competent London tradesmen for their opinion, and their unanimous views were that the work was well done, that the tailors knew their business, but the character of the work was not English. When told that the clothes were made by Chinese the astonishment of these gentlemen was only equalled by their interest. The sac suit, overcoats of varying weights and cuts, and "sing-song clothes" (as the Chinese persist in terming dress suits) constitute the bulk of the native work; but the tailor is equal to uniforming a policeman or rigging out a rough sailor.—George Osborne, in Men's Wear.

Suitings and Overcoatings

Fall Trade is Good—Jobbers Showing Lines for 1908—Some of the Favored Colors.

Jobbers have found trade very satisfactory indeed in all lines of suitings, overcoatings and tailors' trimmings. During the cool weather which set in toward the end of last month business took a brisk turn.

Prices continue high, with market very firm. No decline in prices need be expected for some time; in fact, it is not improbable that a further advance will take place. Merchants will find it good policy to place orders as soon as possible. By so doing they will make sure of present rates, and also of good delivery. At present mills are filled up, and, in some cases, will not accept orders for several months ahead.

The big call in suitings will be for blues and blacks, but it is expected that browns, or, rather, brown mixtures, will have a large sale. There will still be a demand for greys also. One firm states that good business is being done in tweeds. In this material brown and leather mixtures are favored. In overcoatings the strong feeling is for meltons and beavers, although cheviots, too, are prominent. Blacks and greys are, at present, the leading colors.

Jobbers are starting to show all lines for Spring, 1908, business. Most of them look forward to a record season. Worsteds, in drab and elephant grey, are expected to remain in popular favor. Deliveries will be slow.

STYLES ACROSS THE LINE.

The following summary of American styles for Fall and Winter is taken from the Sartorial World:

Coats.—All sack coats will be cut so as to button up higher than last season, the length averaging from 30½ to 31 inches for a figure 5 feet 8 inches in height. The shoulder will be somewhat wider than last season and the sides and back slightly shaped with a tendency towards a looser back effect, but with no vents nor creases. While the shoulders of the coat are cut a little wider, the sleeve tops are reduced accordingly and a fairly good width of the shoulders is preserved in the finished garment. The sleeves at cuff are usually made up with a vent with from one to three buttons and blind button-holes. All sack coats should be cut with a "chesty" effect, i.e., full chest, small at lower button with ample hip fullness. Business cutaway frocks as well as all other frock coats will have medium width of shoulders, close fitting waist and with ample hip fullness. The average length of business cutaway frocks will be 37 inches; semi-dress cutaway frocks, 38 inches and double-breasted frocks, 41 inches.

Overcoats.—All sack overcoats will be cut full and draped two sizes. The shoulders will be of moderate width. The frock overcoat will be shapely in the waist, with ample hip fullness. The shoulders on frock overcoats will be a trifle wider than on sack coats, which are cut extremely narrow.

Vests.—Vests for single and double-breasted sack coats and business cutaway frocks, if made from the same material as the coat, are usually made single-breasted, no collar. The opening will average 13, and full length 26 inches. Vests to go with single-breasted and double-breasted frocks, if made of the same material as coat will be single-breasted with a notch collar.

Fancy Vests.—The double-breasted lapel vest, made from neat pattern, will be used with the double-breasted and single-breasted frock coats. Fancy vests to go with business suits may be made in any style of cut and material, as there is no limit to styles in fancy vests.

Trousers.—Trousers to go with business suits are of moderate width, averaging 19 to 19½ knee and 16½ to 17 bottom. Trousers for dress purposes will average 18½ to 19 knee, and 16 to 16½ bottom.

NOTES.

Curtis, Leggatt & Co., Troy, N.Y., manufacturers of shirts, collars and cuffs, have gone into bankruptcy, with liabilities of $1,100,000 and assets of about $2,000,000. This action was forced, it is said, by the tightness of the money market.

"We have a lot of women visitors at this time of the year," said a tailor in July. "They come in for a lesson in folding and packing away of men's clothes. They are young married women mostly. This is the first time they have gone away for a Summer trip with their husbands. In most cases the packing of trunks devolves upon them. Naturally they can manage their own clothes all right, but when it comes to folding coats and trousers they are floored. They are anxious for their husbands' garments to be taken out unwrinkled at the end of the trip, so they come to us for instruction in folding."

Things had gone badly at the office that day, and Jones was in a bad humour when he reached home.

"What are you doing?" he harshly demanded, abruptly entering the sitting-room.

"I'm just going to trim this five-shilling hat I bought yesterday," replied his trembling wife.

"Extravagant woman, you will ruin me with your everlasting bargain hunting!" he exclaimed; and, seizing the hat, he crumpled it in his hands, trampled it underfoot, and, finally flinging it into the corner of the room, strode away.

Weeping, the wife stooped to pick up her insulted property, but her tear-stained face was suddenly illuminated with rapture as her eyes fell upon it.

"Oh!" she exclaimed in delight, "now it is the exact shape of that ten-guinea French hat I saw yesterday, and I never could have got it that way myself. All it needs is a couple of blue roses and a bunch of lavender buttercups."

A. W. B. Evans, of George H. Evans & Son., Montreal, was married on August 7th to Miss Irving, of Montreal. The honeymoon was spent at Old Orchard, Boston, and other eastern cities.

J. A. Beaudry, provincial secretary, Retail Merchants' Association, Montreal, will return about the end of the month from an extensive trip to Europe, where he is on business for the association.

J. E. Stephens, manufacturers' agent, Vancouver, B.C., was in the Montreal market last month, obtaining new connections. Mr. Stephens enjoys a wide acquaintance throughout British Columbia.

W. H. Barry, of Walter Barry & Co., Montreal, is again in the city after an extensive visit to foreign ribbon markets. The results of his trip will be apparent in the Spring lines of the firm.

Clothing ordered from Montreal tailors has been smuggled into the United States in large quantities. Recently several seizures have been made by United States customs officers. The goods were packed under seats in Pullman cars.

Miss K. Whalen, buyer of ready-to-wear garments for The C. Ross Co., Ottawa, was in the Montreal market last month on her return from a two months' trip through European markets. Miss Whalen has a reputation as a keen judge of merchandise and a fashion expert.

J. W. Brown, Montreal agent, who was in New York recently, brings back a good story of the Teddy Bear craze in the city of New York. He states that in some instances real live cub bears are on display in some of the stores, and a good one retails as high as $75.

A. H. Wheler, with Debenhams (Canada), Limited, Canadian headquarters, Montreal, has severed his connection with the above firm and has joined Mr. Zerboni, room 224 Coristine Building, and in future they will carry on business under the firm name of Zerboni & Co.

The Montreal branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada held its annual picnic at Dominion Park, the Coney Island of Montreal, on Thursday, the 15th of last month. The picnic was a big success, and was enjoyed by a large number of people. For an outing the day was an ideal one.

Harris Wener, of the Montreal Waterproof Clothing Co., Montreal, is at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, during the exhibition. Mr. Wener has been in indifferent health since his return from Europe, but is on the way to complete recovery now. M. Simon, representing the firm, will be with Mr. Wener showing their lines.

Chas. Coppelman is the new representative of the National Rubber Company, Montreal, in the eastern part of Quebec. Mr. Coppelman has had an extensive experience in the raincoat industry and is well able to look after his customers' wants. He has been some seven years with the National people in the manufacturing end.

ONTARIO.

A felt works is to be established at Berlin.

Samuel Garfinkle has opened a general store at Alliston.

R. A. Holland, of Walkerville, will occupy enlarged premises and add a stock of boots and shoes.

Fire did $3,000 worth of damage to the clothing and shoe store of R. C. McFarlane, Niagara Falls.

The Imperial Raincoat & Cloak Co., Toronto, have opened a retail department in connection with their business.

J. G. McKillop has purchased the business of J. D. Miller, Kincardine, the latter having bought out a Windsor merchant.

Dobie & Company, Limited, have taken over the business of Dobie & Co., Thessalon, and will conduct it on a strictly cash basis.

The Sellers-Gough Company, furs, Toronto, have enlarged their premises on Yonge street. The new store is splendidly fitted up.

E. B. Crompton & Co., Brantford, will add one thousand square feet to their already large floor space. This firm has very fine premises.

The ratepayers of Milverton have granted a loan of $8,000 to the J. G. Grosch Felt Shoe Co., who are now proceding to enlarge their premises.

Penmans, Limited, are ready to begin operations in their new factory at Brantford, to be known as the Watson Manufacturing Company, Mill No. 10.

The Mason Clothing Company took over the business at Bowmanville, of the Mason Company, and are having quite extensive alterations made in the store.

Stanley, Mills & Co., Hamilton, are seeking to extend their mail order business. A great many more catalogues than ever before will be sent out for Fall and Winter trade.

It is proposed to establish in Woodstock the factory of the Canadian Pin Co., a company recently organized.

It is expected that the new factory of the Colonial Weaving Co., Peterboro, will be ready to operate early next Summer.

Extensive alterations have been made in the Glasgow Warehouse, Belleville, conducted by Laidlaw & Ketcheson. The whole interior and front has been remodeled and refitted on modern lines.

R. H. Blade, who represented the C.B.C. Corset Co., Toronto, on the eastern Ontario ground, has accepted a position with the P. & C. Corset Co., Quebec, and will cover the same territory.

A woman, masquerading as a man, secured employment in an Ottawa dry goods store, and continued there for months without arousing any suspicion as to her real sex. Articles were missed from the store, and she was suspected. Then the deception was discovered. A number of the missing articles were found in her room.

The Purvis Cotton Factory, on the Don Esplanade, Toronto, was badly gutted by fire on the night of August 12. The building was a one-storey structure, about 125 feet long by 40 feet wide, valued at about $2,000, while the machinery was worth about $7,000. There was also a loss of baled cotton, valued at $5,000. The factory will be rebuilt, without delay, on the same site.

J. A. Diebel, dry goods merchant, of Windsor, surprised his friends by the announcement that he had sold out. He had just purchased his premises from his landlord and was in the midst of extensive alterations, when J. D. Miller, of Kincardine, dropped in and asked him if he would sell his business, and if so, what were his figures. Mr. Diebel replied in the affirmative and quoted his price. Mr. Miller agreed, and the deal was made. Mr. Diebel intends traveling abroad for about a year.

The Canadian Millinery Review

The selling season will begin earlier this Fall, as many of the larger stores have already held their openings. The early opening is beginning to be the rule, as it lengthens the retail season at its most profitable end, and gives scope for the holding of later openings. Thus, a store with a large department is now showing Fall hats. As the season develops, Winter hats will be shown, and after that fur-trimmed and velvet shapes. Handsome tea hats, etc., form an excuse for extra flurries, and also to draw people into the store and department.

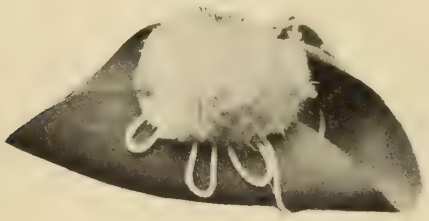
If a thorough change in shapes, trimming effects, etc., is of benefit to the selling end, certainly this season should be an ideal one. The new shapes are radical—so radical that milliners are a little shy of them. Already, however, the modifying process has begun, and there is no doubt that before the trade settles steadily down, wearable, becoming and yet novel models will be in evidence. This is a process that takes place each year, but it is extra necessary this year.

The ultra Paris hat is immense; there is a wide, circular, drooping brim that rests on the shoulder at the back. It has a high cloche crown, and is worn far back upon the head. The cartwheel under brim is faced with silk and has a binding of satin or velvet. The high crown is banked with large-sized roses, tiger or arum lilies, orchids or other large blooms, and loops and ends of wide flowered ribbon, or is covered with immense plumes of ostrich, coque, or waving fancy feathers, or has big bows of silk and large soft wings as a trimming. All this trimming is massed on the crown in front, leaving the back almost, or entirely bare. Any style more opposed to the small tilted shapes and high trimmed backs of a couple of seasons ago would be difficult to imagine. This is the ultra style, and while many of the salient features are retained, those that are merely bizzare are eliminated. The result is decidedly good, and millinery styles for the Fall are both new and becoming—so new that no amount of making over will disguise last season's hat.

The New Shape



Drooping Brims a Factor—New Gainsborough and Cavalier Shapes—Felts, Sheered Beaver and Covered Hats of Velvet and Silk to be Worn.

Size is the chief characteristic of the fashionable shapes, and the drooping brim an all-prevailing factor. Drooping brims are paramount and are reminiscent of, though different from the mushrooms of the Spring and Summer seasons. Every possible change is rung upon drooping brim styles. Many picture shapes are seen, some of them in hybrid mushroom and Gainsborough shapes, with the side brim raised high in the well-known Gainsborough fashion, and the back in the drooping effect. Cavalier shapes are also shown. The newest are of soft close cut beaver, the crown moderately high, and the brim rolled up unevenly. The Henry VIII. is another new type. This shape has a high mob or beefeater crown, with a narrow, stiff, mushroom brim. The shapes generally are picturesque, but are a totally different type to the Louis styles we have so long been accustomed to.

The more extreme shapes come in dress hats, developed in the made shapes, smoothly covered with velvet or silk. The high crowns that buyers are just a little doubtful of, occur in these hats—felt shapes almost invariably have the lower crowns.

Flops, hoods, etc., in fine soft finished felt, and in sheered beaver, have sold extremely well. With these, the milliner has free scope, and she can practically control the shape. A flop shape with a big baloon crown has been a great seller.

A shape that is taking, has a very short front brim, and is very broad at the sides, and narrower again at the back. There is a large flat, moderately high, drooping sailor shape that is selling also. There never was a season when so little of the sailor type was shown.

Trimmings

Feathers Most Important—Ribbons Freely Used—Velvet, Taffeta, Pins and Ornaments Much in Evidence.

Feathers undoubtedly occupy the first place in the Fall millinery trimmings, though in the very high-class trade flowers may occupy the extreme style pinnacle. Exclusive milliners have been making extensive use of feathers for over a year now, and though they will lead in the medium and popular end iof the trade, flowers will be the ultra trimming. Not that high-class milliners will not make free use of feathers as well—of handsome ostrich and other plumes—but flowers, with this class of trade, will be just a little newer.

A LARGE FLOP,

with soft dome crown, a bandlau of gilt around crown. Trimmings, a knot of taffeta silk with two large ostrich plumes drooping down back. Shown by Debenhams (Canada) Limited.

Ostrich demands first place, and in spite of price, will be freely used, chiefly in long, handsome plumes. Fox-tail effects are shown, but they have not the novelty of the Spring, and are passed over for lovely natural plumes. Next to ostrich is the vogue of plume effects in fancy feathers that can be used to take its place at less cost. These are chiefly made up from coque feathers, and the styles and varieties are endless. Soft, large, wing effects, that milliners can crush and manipulate at will, are freely shown, and also large feather pom poms. Feathers are used as flowers were, the latter part of the Summer, covering all of the crown of the hat. Fancy birds' heads, ending in soft, waving plumes, and owls and pigeons' heads, with double plumes, are among novelties noticed.

Feathers come in every imaginable shading and blending of shades, and can be had to tone in with every color. Next to feathers must be placed ribbons, which are lavishly employed. Wide ribbons are most in demand, from 80 up being the popular widths. Prices are high and the manufacturers are rushed with orders. To enable the importing houses to meet the present demand, ribbon orders for present selling were placed quite a year ago. Prices are still on the up-grade, and this month another advance has been made by the ribbon manufacturers. The world-wide demand is the cause.

Velvet is most important, not only for the all-velvet hat, but for trimming purposes as well. Soft millinery velvets are much used, and novelty velvets as well. In fancy velvets, terry, or uncut and shot effects, have taken a high place. Satin is ultra, and taffetas, both plain and shot, are used. Ottoman and other ribbed silks are coming into favor.

Ornaments are going to be a larger factor than for some seasons. The big pins have pointed the way. Pins in large ball shapes, mushroom elongated pear shapes, etc., are all good, and buckles and bands are excellent.

The flowers showing are all large blooms. They are of velvet and beautifully tinted and shaded. The high novelties are convolvuli, orchids, arum lilies, etc. Very large single roses are also good. Grapes, small apples and berries, as well as foliage, are also the vogue.

Variety Great in Fall Colors

Increasing interest in Purple Shades—Brown in Many Shades the Most Seen Color.

The evique or egg-plant shades, as they are indiscriminately called, are the last-moment candidates for favor. This color will be very prominent at the openings, and promises considerable strength later.

Brown comes in an extra large range of shades, and is, perhaps, the most frequently seen of all the Fall colors. There are several good sets of this color—notably golden, bronze, copper, etc. Tans and beiges are included, and though leathers are not much in evidence, old gold is a color that is being taken up by the exclusive trade.

Little is seen of navy or royal, in spite of the vogue of blue. The blues shown are of the fancy order, and peacock is the ultra shade. Nattier, Delft, old blue, etc., are much in evidence, and will be good later. Pastel shades in blue, and soft rose pinks, have sold exceedingly well, better, in fact, than they were expected to do. White hats are not numerous, and black is expected to become much stronger as the season advances. Black and white promises to be a much-worn combination, and white, trimmed with a color, is expected to appear later.

Green, in clear, decided shades, is a fair seller. Burgundy is good and cardinal is making its appearance. Grey, in pearl and taupe, has some following.

Immense foxtail plumes decorated some of the hats, and there was a superb display of ostrich and other fancy feathers and wings. Besides velvet, both plain and shot satin and bengaline were used for trimmings. Handsome ribbons and lovely velvet flowers were much used.

Review was handed a handsome catalogue that set forth at length the interesting tale of the season's novelties This catalogue, which has been delayed until the last possible moment, so as to present the latest leading styles and tendencies of the Paris, London and New York markets, will be found to be a very correct guide to buying and to the lines that will prove salable on the Canadian market.

Quoting from this catalogue, as to the season's novelties, "Hats are to be distinctly different this season. The shapes are varied and cover such a wide range that individual choice is possible to a great degree. The large cloche or bell-shaped hats are favorites. These are worn off the face, giving an entirely new and stylish effect. Velvet and felt hats are both popular, and at the outset it is hard to say which will predominate. The materials used are the fine ostrich or couche velvets, and in the the felts, the fur and fine glossy wools are right. Long sweeping plumes of paradise, goura and coque, will be used very largely during the season. Goura is shown in grey and white, and in all colors, especially in purple, which will be one of the leading colors. The cold violet tone is the favorite Parisian color for the moment, although such shades as empire green, tan, leather, Atlantic blue, are considered quite new.

"Wings are shown in great variety, but principally in long, pointed effects. They are used very freely on the models, sometimes as many as six or eight pairs being used on one hat. Apparently there is nothing in the feather trimming line that is newer than coque feather effects. Plumes, pompoms, cockades, breasts, and many fancy pieces are shown. Uncurled ostrich or vulture is shown in numerous effects and in combination with other colors.

"Glittering ornaments, large buckles, variously oblong, square, oval, diamond shaped, and in bands, bars, etc., have once more a notable place. Fancy pins are likewise in demand. Ball pins are used in unending variety. Shell pins and ornaments, with tracings of gold and mock jewels set in, are very elegant and new.

"Flowers are a distinct novelty, especially the natural flowers, such as morning glories, wistaria and orchids, while roses in all the new shadings will be an important factor. Im materials, velvets, ribbons and piece silks are all strong, the shot effects and new colorings forming an attractive item."

S. F. McKinnon & Co.

S. F. McKinnon & Co. held their opening on August 26, just one week earlier than the other Toronto houses. This day, they found, was convenient for their customers, as it gives them more time to have the goods shipped and to prepare for the holding of the retail openings. They had a very fine display, and the crowd was decidedly a buying one. Novelty styles in coats and skirts were also on view. At present, as far as can be seen, the long loose coat, with Japanese sleeve effect, is to be the big seller. Colored coats are beginning to be enquired for.

J. C. Green & Co.

J. C. Green & Co. had on show a large collection of pattern hats. The manner of showing here was decidedly good. The hats were on high nickel stands, and each color was grouped alone.

In spite of threatening clouds—which, fortunately, only threatened—the visiting milliners and buyers were out in force on the morning of September 2. By eight o'clock the sidewalks in the wholesale dry goods section were crowded as they only are on opening days. The fact that the openings were carried through in comfort was certainly due to the weather, not to any consideration the city authorities have for Toronto's large dry goods interests. The whole centre of Wellington St. west to Bay St., has been torn up. In one place there is no sidewalk, and a crossing has to be made over displaced paving stones. Wellington, east, and also west, of Bay, are not so bad as this section. At opening time thousands of dollars' worth of rich and delicate fabrics are on display, and this year there must have been considerable loss from the dust and dirt that it was impossible to keep out of the warehouses. Sunday's rain laid the dust that would otherwise have been a nuisance, but had the downpour continued Monday the streets would have been deep with mud.

D. McCall & Co.

This will, it is expected, be the last opening held by this firm in their present warehouse, as their handsome new building on Wellington west is nearing completion. Monday's opening, with the D. McCall Co., was the climax to a most successful selling season. Not only was the display of pattern hats of great interest, but the large stock of millinery trimmings, felts, etc., claimed a considerable share of the visitors' attention.

Though the large shapes were featured, there were many of the smart effects of medium size that milliners are so eager for. Perhaps the most striking hat shown was a large cloche in deep plum shade. The large drooping brim was plainly covered with taffeta silk, the facing being of the same, edged with a fold. The crown was a draped one of the same silk, and set in the drapery around the crown were big roses made of folded chiffon. Among the smart medium sized shapes shown was a turban, the balloon crown covered with emerald green velvet. The brim, like many seen now, is wider at the sides. The upturned part is covered with a band of Japanese embroidery in blues and greens. A trefoil ornament of cretonne embroidery is placed on the left side, fastening in place a feather effect formed by five shaded quills, one navy, two emerald, one grey and one Atlantic blue.

Many beautiful black hats were shown, one of velvet silk, chenille and fancy ostrich completing a muff and stole set of the same. The many shades of brown were very prominent, and many smart hats were shown developed in this color. Hats of emerald and empire green were prominent, and the red shades—the Burgundies, garnets, etc.—were also shown, as well as grey.

G. Goulding & Co.

The warehouse of this firm has been thronged with buyers for the past two weeks, and they are entirely satisfied with the way in which the season has opened up. In their large showroom on Monday the product of their own workrooms was placed side by side with the exclusive creations of Paris and New York. Early in the day it was not possible to view these creations to advantage, owing to the crowd, but those who returned later had a better opportunity of appreciating the beauty and magnitude of the display.

From the hats seen here medium shapes are going to lead, except for tea hats, etc. The colors show a leaning to dull, rich, dark tones, though pale blue, rose and white have sold well. Purple and butcher blue are prominent colors, but the season promises to be one in which the demand will not centre in a few shades. Brown is decidedly strong, and the green shades—emerald and empire particularly—are good. The red series—Burgundy, garnet, etc.—promise well, and two hats in this showroom attracted great attention. They were of black satin with bright cardinal feathers.

Gouldings' sets are always a feature of the openings, and several handsome ones, as usual, were shown. There was a splendid Japanese bolero of mink, dyed lace and velvet, and one of Persian lamb and empire green. The most noticed was a set of ermine, black velvet and cerise velvet.

NEW YORK MODE

With the usual inclination to "rush the season," the New York shops are displaying in their show windows the novelties in millinery and dress goods for Fall. Little groups of admiring men and women gather critically before each exhibit, and in everything one feels an approaching interest in Fall apparel.

We have agreed, I think, before, that color is preeminent. The colors so far selected for Autumn wear are exceedingly rich and beautiful. Olive greens, beautiful Mandarin blues, lovely shades of rich purplish-red, smoke greys and mahoganys are the order of the day. With the exception of sulphur and paon, two noticeably bright hues, there are hardly any "high" colors in evidence. Sulphur has been tried and found notably wanting on several other occasions, and its success during the coming season is questionable. Touches of it are extremely difficult to successfully attain, and rare, indeed, is the woman whose complexion is at its best when wearing its greenish-yellow, or, rather, its yellowish-green tones. However, sulphur is being shown, for in Paris it has not proven unpopular. More success can be prohphesied for paon. The shades are really very alluring, and can be worn by both blonde and brunette types with much more pleasing effect. In millinery, especially, are paon or peacock colorings at their best. Many beautiful hats have found their way to New York, which have demonstrated the value of these lovely shades for millinery purposes. Mention has already been made in these letters of the importance of the crocus shades. The name, we venture to think, is a trifle confusing, but it applies to the peculiarly rich heliotrope or purple that we are wearied of calling amethyst. Rather than for color combinations, the trend seems to be for harmony in blending two or even three shades of the one color. As a result, the chapeau is really an artistic creation when the colors are selected by one who has keen appreciation of color values. Exquisite harmonies in reddish-purple and reddish-brown shades are noticed.

HAT OF PAON FELT,

with facing of moire silk in darker shades. Low, circular bandeau, covered with brown maline. Shaped crown of moire silk, relieved by bands of tapestry ribbon in peacock colorings and gold. Ostrich tips and buckle of filigree Etruscan gold Shape is a representative one with short front and extremely long sides and back.

One of the models illustrated was in these beautiful wine shades. The trend does not seem to be toward a one-color season, although probably it is rather early to make a positive assertion in this regard, as blues are a very strong factor in almost all shades. The season will most certainly be ushered in with large hats, and some wiseacres are predicting that these will be followed by hats of diminutive size. This, however, is as yet only a theory, and it seems quite out of the usual order of things to have large hats precede instead of succeed the small hat. Apparently it is to be another season of mushroom and bell shapes, with very large, if not necessarily high crowns. Even the manner in which they are to be worn remains unchanged. One thing is greatly evidence, and that is that silk hats are to enjoy favor. The chosen weave is moire, although whether satin or moire is deserving of most consideration, it would be difficult to state. The velvet hat is certainly not out of the running, although many of them are faced with silk or satin, and otherwise ornamented with these materials. For demi-season wear, the silk hat is a boon, and for evening wear, especially, when in light colors, the satin hat is at its best.

It seems almost trite to say that large quantities of ribbons will be used. The demand seems to be almost entirely for the extremely wide ribbon, almost, if not quite, sash width. Here, again, moire is conspicuously followed closely by fancy weaves and plain satin bows of apparently innumerable loops, and the most intricate cabbage rosettes are the most accepted form. These are placed either at the back or front of the hat, rather than at the side as broad effects are still the form considered most desirable. As a matter of fact, the season's millinery is decidedly heavy in effect, and since the position on the head is a decided tipped-back one, it looks as if balance would have to be very nicely considered, since velvets and silks, huge ribbon bows, feathers and ornaments in the aggregate really mean no inconsiderable weight.

Ostrich feathers have many formidable rivals this season in the beautiful combinations which are freely displayed, and which are extremely difficult to describe. One of the novelties is shown. It is a combination, as can be seen from the photograph, of paradise and ostrich fronds. Practically, the same idea is seen, substituting marabout for ostrich. As probably nine out of ten feather trimmed hats have the feathers mounted to form a backward droop, it is necessary to elongate the plumage as much as possible, and for this purpose paradise is excellent. Willow and all loosely curled effects have the preference in ostrich goods. Uncurled ostrich is not greatly in evidence although vulture and blondine effects are used on hats of medium and low grade.

The tailored hat apes its more pretentious sister, the picture hat. Sweeping feathers, such, for example, as of uncut velvet in Jacquimont shades. Large velvet roses, shading from red to purple, are nested in folds of velvet, and are veiled with a heavy mesh net dotted in chenille. The underbrim is faced with silk and piped with velvet.

coque, or hackle, and large, beautifully colored wings give a very smart, and, at the same time, picturesque note. French felts, faced and otherwise ornamented with silk or velvet, are very dressy. The short front and wide, drooping back brim, known to fame as the Fluffy Ruffles, continues a strong favorite for Fall.

Expressions of regret and disappointment one hears from the insatiable seekers after something new. If the season cannot offer much in the way of novelty, it has certainly made up for sensation in the beauty of its offerings.

Veils must not be overlooked in any account of things to be seriously considered in preparing for the coming season. The position of the long chiffon veil never was stronger. The newest are perfectly square in shape, with a plain hem or more elaborate border. These lend themselves very gracefully to the draping of the huge hats, over which an ordinary veil would be entirely inadequate. The veil covers the entire top of the hat and is drawn rather tightly over the face and pinned long on the hat, almost at the neck. The corners hang in graceful folds to the shoulder, or even to the waist or below. One of the smartest veils of the season is of plain chiffon with a border of large coin dots. A white chiffon veil, with a three-inch border of dark coin dots in graduated sizes, is one of the smartest of the season.

Separate waists of taffeta or other suitable material are to be made with the front box pleat flanked on either side, with knife pleatings of the material, or, if the material be plain, of a gay plaid. Plaids are selling well, not only for separate waists, but for dresses as well. Jumper dresses appear to have become, if anything, more popular. Very pretty and serviceable are those of panama, taffeta, or some medium weight material, the sleeves and yoke being of washable fabric. The shops are offering many pretty designs in jumper dresses, the majority being in one piece and having a short pleated skirt and no sleeves. Net and mousseline make dressy guimpes, which have invariably elbow-length sleeves. This is not true, however, of the tailor-made. The French tailor-made, which is really an elaborate creation, may have sleeves which terminate just below the elbow. Evening dresses, which follow the Empire in every particular, have practically no sleeves, the puffs or ruffles, as the case may be, barely reaching over the shoulder. Undoubtedly the modified or fitted Empire will be the prevailing mode for the grande toilette, if not for street wear. The long, tight-fitting and shorter semi-fitted coat draped with golden-brown velvet, forming a huge crown effect. Facing of velvet. Fancy feather pom-pom is a clever combination of ostrich and paradise, the ostrich fronds being pasted to tips of paradise tails.

LARGE PLATEAU OF SULPHUR-COLORED VELVET,

will be the popular choice. Capes are the very newest, but will, in all probability, for this season, at least, be confined to evening or carriage wear. Nothing could be more picturesque than the circular cape with its little satin-lined hood, and its success has already been demonstrated. The present-day mode is a strange mixture of the picturesque and practical. There are many things to be thankful for, not least among them, the continuance in favor of the short skirt for street wear.

Paris Fashions

Coming Winter will be Record Velvet Season—The Cloche Brim on the Winter Hats.

French manufacturers are anticipating that this coming Winter will be a record season for velvets. Velvets of all descriptions, they say, are to be employed by furriers, tailors, dressmakers and milliners, all in the most liberal manner. Some of the new printed designs of flowers are quite novel in their effect, but stripes and spots will probably be more popular. A good line is a narrow, black stripe on colored ground. This the maisons de nouveauties are readily buying, but the grands couturiers are introducing spotted goods, and many of the smartest of the derniers' creations have been of spotted silks and linens. Furriers will employ the velvet, not only as collars and cuffs on their fur garments, but also as waistcoats, undersleeves, completing the manche japonaise, or the entire sleeve will be carried out in that material. The manche peplum, which is a Japanese sleeve opened under the arm and falling in two points, will adapt itself readily to this style. On tailored costumes it will rival the silk braids that are now being used for trimming, and at least one leading tailor will introduce a plain velvet jacket to be worn over a cloth skirt. The trimming, of either braid or fur, will correspond on the two garments. Already some beautiful house gowns of velvet, liberally ornamented with both fur and lace, are to be seen. Lace, itself, will still play an important part in the Parisienne's dress. The popularity of the lace blouse seems, if possible, to be on the increase, both Venise and Irish being much employed, and entire evening gowns are being carried out in this costly material. A very effective model carried out in mousseline-de-soie, over rose silk, is made with a long tunic of lace opening up to the waist at each side and falling in a point to the hem, back and front. The decolte bodice is also of lace, with the same "transparent," and crosses over at back and front (this cross-over style is much in vogue just now) the small V being filled in with mousseline and valenciennes. The sleeve is quite short, and consists of the mousseline and valenciennes gathered into a vertical line on the upper arm. Another very beautiful evening gown is carried out in white peau-de-soie and ornamented with bands of swansdown. The effect of this trimming is light and graceful, and will probably become popular. Shantung

No. 2.—Khaki Cloth Vetement with draped cape. Motifs of white passementerie, liberty violet collar, and violet lining to the cape.

No. 3.—Black and White Tweed Cloak, made with bretelles and shoulder capes.

is another material which has "caught on" with the public, and Winter blouses for day wear will, many of them, be made of it. This looks well when made quite simply in pleats or tucks; as a shirtwaist or for more dressy wear it can be liberally ornamented with lace, the filet with a narrow valenciennes edging giving particularly happy results. The great majority of blouses are white; in fact, it has not been correct to wear a colored waist under a jacket this Summer. A few striped or spotted batiste have been used for morning wear, but the all-white craze is easily accounted for by the fact that the great majority of these garments are made of lace or lingerie, and a color would be impossible.

Hat fabricants differ considerably as to the size of the hat to be worn this Winter, but there is little or no doubt that the enormous shapes of this Summer have come to stay for a time. Many of the new models are made with quite high crowns, but the medium size will probably prevail. Whatever else there may be doubt about, there certainly is none as regards the cloche brim; every second Winter model is being made with one. The shapes are being made of smooth felt, and a few of soft beaver, but a long poile felt is hardly to be seen. Many velvets, "velour-colle," which means that the form is made up by the fabricant, and not by the modiste, which at once brings it to a popular price. Both gathered and plisse taffeta hats are also being made. For the Autumn violet and mauve will be the leading shades, but they will probably not last long into the Winter, being replaced by blues and reds. Many delicate shades of blue, such as blue nattier, blue pervenche and such-like tones, will certainly be much used. For trimming, large wings will replace the fantaisie of last year and wide velvet ribbons the taffeta ribbons of this Summer. Some of the velvets are printed with a pompadour design of flowers and striped border ; others are striped, both wide and narrow effects being employed ; many are absolutely plain. Ostrich feathers of all descriptions, and arranged in every possible style, will still be de rigeur for dress hats.

Of the models sketched, No. 1 shows a very beautiful white felt shape, with narrow violet velvet band round the brim. Four large ostrich feathers are fastened at the front of the crown, falling over the crown and to each side ; these are shaded violet and mauve. The hat has a narrow bandeau, covered with tulle to match the shade of the coiffure, into which the waves and little curls of hair are fastened, thus filling out the large cavity which otherwise would exist under the cloche brim.

No. 3 is a model in black and white, the large wings being shaded. No. 1 is a fantaisie in black velvet. Raised sharply from the head on the right-hand side, the brim falls down, almost hiding the left ear. A bunch of six uncurled ostrich feathers is fastened in the front and falls over the crown to the back of the hat.

Quite another style of head-dress that is being introduced is the oval-shaped toque. This has a fairly high crown, rounded after the style of the "chapeau melon," but much longer, and sometimes having the crown indented down the centre. The brim is narrow, short in front, and raised sharply at each side. The trimming consists of a bow of velvet or feathers fastened at the left side ; or a smart effect is obtained by two wings arranged Mercury fashion, one being attached at each side and pointed backwards. Sometimes four wings will be employed, for instance, one green and one brown at each side, the other trimming or the hat recalling these two shades. Bronze and roux is another good mixture.

Another striking model is carried out in khaki-colored felt and trimmed with a drapery of black and white velvet, fastened on the right side under a choux of the same material. Black feathers fall slightly over the edge of the cloche brim, where it is raised in front.

A very beautiful cloak model is in violet-faced cloth, trimmed with a narrow edging of zibeline. The smart little waistcoat is made of cream lace, as are also the insertions down the back of the loose sleeves ; these are ornamented with gold galon and buttons. A heavy-looking belt is made of gold silk cord.

No. 4. Blue Serge Jacket, edged black silk braid. Large side pockets. Black Velvet Hat, trimmed with white uncurled feathers.

No. 2 is carried out in khaki-colored cloth, and is made with a gracefully pleated cape that falls to a point at the back, and is fastened to the centre of the cloak in front. The large buttons are of white kid, with a khaki rim round the centre, and the motifs and galon of white passementerie. A roll collar of violet liberty silk and a silk lining to the cape of the same shade adds the necessary touch of color.

No. 3 is a useful traveling model in black and white check tweed, made with double sleeves and wide bretelles, cut on the cross, and waist tabs finished with black pearl buttons. The skirt hangs in full pleats. The fastening consists of a single row of black pearl buttons. The collar and cuffs are of white kid, ornamented with narrow black braid, and a black velvet edging.

No. 4 is a semi-sacque short jacket of blue serge edged and trimmed with a black silk "tresse," and has large pockets at each side. The short sleeves are finished off with a double frill of lace, and the jacket crosses over in front and has double fastenings. The buttons are blue serge, edged with the same black "tresse."

THE ENGLISHMAN IN CANADA

A young Englishman wrote to the Drapers' Record recently, complaining of the treatment he had received at the hands of Canadian drygoodsmen. He states that he was refused employment just because he was an Englishman. One of the department managers of a Montreal store promptly took exception to his remarks. The communications are reproduced herewith:

Canada for the Canadians.

Sir,—I am writing this to let you know what Canadian employers in the drapery trade think of Englishmen; also to serve as a warning to other Englishmen who contemplate coming out to this country to better themselves. I came out here twelve months ago, and went to Toronto, which city I was told was a good city for the dry goods trade. After repeatedly being told by employers that they could not engage me because I was an Englishman, I got a berth at last with a house, where I remained until I heard of a better situation with an English house of repute having a branch in Montreal. This situation I managed to secure. Since being here I was recommended by a gentleman of good business standing (who has known me since my residence in this city, and can vouch for my business abilities, etc.) to the house whose letters I enclose, as they were looking for a smart man to manage some of their departments. After interviewing one of the partners of the firm in question, and the matter of salary, experience, and references having been gone into and settled satisfactorily, he told me that the only thing against me was that I was an Englishman, but that they would go into the matter and let me know definitely in a few days. The enclosed letters are the result.

I thought perhaps that, as I am not the only Englishman by a long way who has experienced the same thing, a word in your columns might serve as a warning to others in the drapery and kindred trades who contemplate coming out here.

I should esteem it a favor if you would publish the above.

Yours very truly,

An Englishman.

Montreal, Canada.

The following are copies of the letters to which this correspondent refers:

Toronto, May 6, 1907.

Dear Sir,—I have been thinking over our conversation in Montreal, and cannot decide at the moment. As I told you, the objection to yourself would be that you had not a Canadian training, and that we had been rather unfortunate with our English department men. I may write you very shortly, definitely, but in the meantime, as I said I would write to-day, I beg to say that I cannot write definitely.

I am, etc.

Toronto, May 15, 1907.

Dear Sir,—On further thinking over the proposition of our offering you a position in the warehouse, I have decided that in consideration of the unfortunate experience that we have had, any one other than a Canadian would be working under a disadvantage and not have the confidence of the men. I regret that this is the position, but after having two or three men who were, unfortunately, failures, and these men were Englishmen, confidence is somewhat shaky.

Regretting that such is the case,

I am, etc.

Pure Rubbish!

Sir,—I notice in your journal a letter from a draper's salesman complaining of the manner in which Englishmen are treated by the trade in Canada. If I am not greatly mistaken, this same letter was published in our Montreal newspapers some time ago, and was commented on and replied to in no uncertain terms. Although there are one or two good and true points stated therein, yet, on the whole, the letter is highly misleading, and should be "sat upon" most decisively. It conveys the idea that the incidents which this particular salesman experienced are to be found all over Canada, and that any of the craft coming over here may expect to go through the same routine. This is pure rubbish. There is scarcely a house of any repute in the country (with the exception, possibly, of Quebec City) but which has Englishmen on the staff, and in nearly all the large cities and towns, except Montreal and Quebec, they get employment as quickly as those of any other nationality, every bit! In the Province of Quebec about 70 per cent. to 75 per cent. are French; therefore, it is almost necessary that a salesman to make any headway should be able to speak both languages. One of the first questions asked is: "Do you speak French?" If you do, you have a much better chance of an engagement than otherwise, but the want of it is by no means an absolute barrier to employment. I have been for several years in one of the largest dry goods houses (as the trade is called in Canada) in Montreal, and in my position as buyer I have had several Englishman under me from time to time, and I do not speak French, neither am I a Canadian, but a native of the Old Country!

A great deal might be written on this subject, but I ask permission to draw attention to two points regarding the majority of drapers' salesmen who come here from England:

First, as a rule, they are what we call "blowers." To hear them speak, you would think no one knew anything about the trade except an Englishman, and they can't stop drawing comparisons on this particular point; consequently, they become obnoxious to many, especially to the French and Irish men neither of whom have any use for a "blowk," being the name given them here. Americans are the biggest gasbags and blowers on the face of the earth, but the majority—mark, the majority—of English drapers who come out here are just as bad.

Second, the term "Englishman" is given to all Britishers, no matter where they come from, in distinction to French or French-Canadians, and as in the large factories probably 60 per cent. to 80 per cent. of the operatives would be French, to put an Englishman over them would be simply ruinous. The same applies to large commercial houses. Were you to put an Englishman without any Canadian training over a staff of men who had, they would be exactly what is described in the letter enclosed by "Englishman" to the Record—utter failures.

If the editor of the Record required a first-class foreman, having had failures in three or four previous ones, all of whom happened to be Scotch, he would more than probably say just what this Canadian merchant did to the next applicant, "Having had two or three failures, all of whom were Scotch, confidence is somewhat shaky."

Althought I am Irish, and consequently cannot be expected to love the English over-much, still, there are a large number of Englishmen in Montreal whose friendship I really very highly appreciate; and in business matters it does not make the least difference to me whether my help is English, French, Dutch, or Scotch, so long as he does his work properly, and is discreet in his observations about those of any other nationality.

There are so many in the trade that I never urge a draper's assistant to come to Canada; but there is always room for one more, and if a man comes along who really knows his business, he will not be long without work.

Yours, etc.,

Montreal, Canada, July, 1907. Ellis.

A Summing Up.

The following comment is made by the Drapers' Record: "A few weeks ago we published a letter from a correspondent who narrated his sorry experiences in attempting to find work in the Canadian drapery trade. The burden of his complaint might be summed up in the phrase, 'No Englishman need apply,' and he sent for our private perusal some letters which certainly supported his argument. Since then we have received one or two letters from Canadians strongly protesting against this correspondent's views. The letter this week from 'Ellis' states very forcibly the case for the other side. We have no doubt whatever that our original correspondent gave us a faithful presentation of his actual experience in Canada, but it has to be borne in mind that it is always dangerous to argue from the particular to the general. We should require considerably more evidence than has been furnished to us before admitting that there was anything like a 'dead set' against Englishmen in Canada. There are certain circumstances to which 'Ellis' refers in his letter which stand in the way of an Englishman finding work easily and quickly in Canada, but the philosophy of the last paragraph of that letter is excellent, and epitomises the spirit which has made our colonies: 'There are so many in the trade that I never urge a draper's assistant to come to Canada, but there is always room for one more, and if a man comes along who really knows his business, he will not be long without work.'"

NEWS FROM VARIOUS POINTS

ST. JOHN, N.B.

Business in both wholesale and retail lines has been very good considering that at this season of the year a lull is looked for. Wholesalers have been devoting themselves largely to shipping, but not by any means all the goods sold have been shipped yet; for the jobbers have been disappointed in getting deliveries, and are, therefore, not in a position themselves to give deliveries. For the present the retailer is not much concerned, for there is no pressing need—consumers have not yet commenced to buy. There is some danger, though, that a little later on this matter may assume a more serious aspect, for manufacturers are very slow in some lines, and the supplying of the jobbers may drag out unseasonably, as it has done on several previous occasions.

Brock & Paterson, St. John and Halifax, have sent out an unusually attractive announcement of their Fall millinery opening, which takes place Sept. 11 and 12. The engravings are very delicate and the light sepia ink on the hand-made paper produces a very artistic effect.

Merchants in all lines of business are expecting that the influx of thousands of visitors, who are expected here to attend the grand firemen's tournament, on September 2 and 3, will give an impetus to trade, as cheap excursions are being given on all the railroads and steamship lines.

D. Magee's Sons, hatters and furriers, held their fur opening on August 13, when an opportunity was afforded the ladies of having a peep at the fashions of the coming season. Messrs. Magee have had their fur show rooms tinted tastefully, and ferns, palms and other plants were displayed to good advantage. A handsome new cabinet was placed along one side of the room, and held caps, muffs and gloves in various styles. Among the offerings shown was a handsome evening coat of cream caracul, with lace insertion, a coat of crimson broadcloth (very striking), and stoles in Russian sable, mink, stone marten and ermine. Handsome jackets of seal, with braid trimmings of Persian lamb, sets of chinchilla, ermine and caracul, as well as motor coats of grey squirrel, with Persian lamb trimmings, and smaller furs of grey lamb, Persian and Icelandic lamb, were displayed in great variety. Men's coats, caps and gloves were also shown, and the display was in every way a very creditable one.

What was, perhaps, one of the most striking and novel advertising features ever seen in this city, was that furnished in one of the windows of Oak Hall, the big clothing house, a few days ago. The window was most realistically fitted up to represent a school room, with maps, desks, blackboard, etc., while six boys—the genuine article—were learning their lessons, under the supervision of a real teacher. Thos. F. Drummie, window dresser for Oak Hall, was the instructor, and as he sat at his desk he called up first one boy and then another to the blackboard, where they were taught, by writing catchy phrases, the cheapness and durability of the garments furnished by this firm. As it was only a week from the re-opening of the public schools, the scheme was a most appropriate one, and an ever-changing crowd surged about the window to see the boys at work.

A committee from the Board of Trade took occasion, a couple of weeks ago, to impress upon Deputy Minister of Railways Butler, and leading officials of the I.C.R., who were here on an inspection tour, the need of improving the I.C.R. yard. It was pointed out to Mr. Butler that the yard room was entirely inadequate for the increasing trade of this port. Frequently dealers had to wait for days to get delivery of goods, owing to the fact that the yard room was limited and cars could not be shunted to advantage. Mr. Butler listened attentively to the complaints, and pointed out that only a limited amount of money could be spent this year. Arrangements had already been made for building a new flour shed and putting in several sidings, and thought this was all that could be undertaken this year. Next year, he said, the matter could be thoroughly gone into and something done to relieve the situation.

An inquiry is being held into the recent fire at Hartland, but beyond establishing the fact that it was of incendiary origin, nothing of importance has been learned, although sensational developments are promised.

Harry Carpenter, a former employe of Manchester, Robertson, Allison, was in the city last month on a vacation trip. He is now located with a firm in Gainsboro, Sask.

The handsome King street store of Macauley Bros. & Co., which was badly gutted by fire in June last, has been in the hands of the contractors for some time, and is now about ready for business again. The firm has been doing business on the three upper floors, which were only slightly damaged, using temporary entrance at the back of the building. The ground floor and basement, which were entirely burned out, have been renewed and painted and new fixtures are being installed. In place of the immense plate glass windows formerly used, which were the largest ever brought into Canada, the tops of the windows have been fitted with prism glass for about a third of the size, the balance being in one large plate. The shelves and fixtures are now being stocked and a very large shipment of goods is expected in a few days. B. R. Macauley, head of the firm, has been on a buying trip for the past month. A grand opening will, no doubt, be announced in a few days.

CHATHAM.

Miss Cooksley, who has conducted a millinery business in this city for the past ten years, left early in August for Lethbridge, Alta., where she intends opening a millinery store. Miss Cooksley made many friends in this city, who will regret her departure for the West, which was largely due to ill health.

E. R. Charles, for the past two and one-half years a member of the staff of Geo. Meynell's men's furnishing store, left at the beginning of August for Toronto, where he expects to locate permanently.

Miss Lillian Terry, of C. Austin & Co.'s staff, has returned from a nine weeks' trip to England, Ireland and the Isle of Man.

Miss Fannie Carry, for the past few years a member of the staff of Smith & Ash, Sarnia, has accepted a position as head milliner at Kelley's, Queen St., during the coming season.

Miss Jessie Martin, of Thos. Stone & Son's staff, daughter of Warren Martin, of Wm. Gordon's, was married on Aug. 22 to Fred W. Ridley, formerly of this city, but now of Red Deer, Alta.

Miss Annie Morris, of the Austin staff, was married at her home in Port Lambton, on Aug. 21 to W. F. Terry, of Chatham township. Prior to her departure, the Austin staff presented Miss Morris with a rattan rocker as a token of their esteem.

Will Foreman, of Wm. Foreman & Co., is taking a trip through the Southern States, taking in New York and the Jamestown Exposition.

Alfred W. Stone, for many years past on the staff of Stone & Co., men's furnishers, recently severed his connection with that firm. Mr. Stone has secured premises on King St., opposite the market, and will start out in business for himself, beginning Aug. 31.

Stone & Co., men's furnishers, are the latest to enlarge. They are adding 16 feet of space to the rear of their store. The contractors are now at work.

The Blonde Lumber Co. have received the contract for the remodeling of Geo. Meynell's store. The remodeling includes a new double front, the woodwork outside being the finest quartered oak, and inside curly maple.

Owing to ill health, M. Shapero, proprietor of the New York Clothing Store, which opened here some two years ago, has been compelled to dispose of his business. C. Austin & Co. have secured the stock, and inaugurated a big special sale, which opened August 24.

On the whole, business this Summer has been pretty good. Workmen have had good wages, and farmers have secured good prices for their crops, which have now passed the danger point. Merchants generally look forward to a good Fall trade.

The Lethbridge Woolen Mills Co., have commenced operations with a staff of between thirty and forty hands. The factory building cost $30,000, and the machinery installed about $35,000.

KINGSTON.

Kingston rejoices at the news that the Grand Trunk is about to commence building a new line between this city and Ottawa, by way of Smith's Falls. When this road is in operation it will bring a good deal of new trade here. It will also provide a much shorter route to Ottawa than the present one, and it is hoped that the G.T.R. repair shops will be located here.

James Johnston, dry goods merchant, who has been in business here for over two years, at 180 Wellington street, has been conducting a "retiring from business" sale for several weeks, and has about cleared out all of his stock. His retirement is due to ill health.

During July and August the dry goods, boot and shoe, clothing and hat stores closed at five o'clock each afternoon, except Saturday, giving the merchants and salespeople a long evening to spend at the parks or on the water. The store employes appreciated this very much.

There is a movement on foot to have all stores close at nine o'clock Saturday evening. As Mr. Laidlaw, head of J. Laidlaw & Son, expressed it, such a practice would be a blessing to both employer and employe. Now, a great many do not get away from the stores until midnight, and they feel very little inclined to get up next morning and go to church. The ministers are taking the matter up from the pulpits, and urging that early closing be adopted. The majority of merchants are in favor of this, but a few will oppose it.

The new premises into which George Mills & Co., hatters and furriers, recently moved, continue to attract a great deal of attention and favorable comment. Some new and striking features have been introduced, among which are the handsome mosaic entrance, unusually deep show windows, and the display windows on the first floor. The building was planned specially to meet the requirements of Mills & Co.'s business, and contains practically two stores. The hat department comprises what is in itself a good-sized store. Down each side is a row of wall and ordinary show cases. This arrangement does away with the use of manufacturers' boxes. In this way better display is possible, and selections can be made much more speedily.

At the rear of the hat store, and some seventy-five feet from the main entrance, is the fur show room. Permanent wall cases give a good effect, and provide splendid facilities for display. A large "well" allows a view of the wholesale department and stock room on the floor above. The ceilings and walls are metal-covered and painted white.

On the second floor, above the hat store, are the manufacturing rooms.

Particular attention has been given the lighting of the store and factory, both electricity and gas being used. Hundreds of electric bulbs make the evening as light as day. A large, illuminated sign has been placed over the entrance. The store is a credit to the Limestone City.

The Knox Co.'s 5, 10 and 15-cent store opened on August 31. This is the company's 86th branch.

Merchants are busy unpacking their Fall and Winter goods, but have not yet arranged them for display.

Laidlaw & Son buy a special line occasionally and put it out, say on Saturday evening between six and ten o'clock, at very attractive prices. Large numbers of people are drawn into the store, and they purchase, besides the bargain goods, a lot of merchandise at regular prices. Newman & Shaw follow the same plan, and find that it helps business very materially.

HINTS TO BUYERS

From information supplied by Sellers, but for which the Editors of THE REVIEW do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

Greenshields, Limited, Montreal.

The travelers of Greenshields, Limited, Montreal, are by now all back from Summer holidays and are starting on Fall sorting trips. In the ready-to-wear department they are showing varied lines of whitewear and blouses for Spring, 1908. Samples are in the hands of the many travelers, and the range is the most extensive ever shown to the trade. The leading sleeve will be the three-quarter length. The staple low lines will demand long sleeves, but for the better class of trade, the three-quarter and one-half sleeve, particularly the three-quarter size, will have the preference. This firm has had some very high grades of French hand-embroidered fronts copied and are showing them in popular-priced garments. These garments are being sold at about one-sixth the price merchants anticipate buying at. Ladies' and children's under-muslins, from their own special designs, trimmings and cloths, are absolutely the best value presented to the trade for many seasons. In this, notwithstanding the fact that the price of raw materials and labor has advanced, they are offering this season a more complete line than ever before, with no advance in prices. Merchants who are wise will place orders early for December delivery and have that tonic to trade, a January whitewear sale, when otherwise business would be quiet.

As it is well known to the trade, the "Shield Brand" furs are always to the front. For Fall and Winter trade they have already laid plans to show the largest and most select and profitable range of furs yet offered to the Canadian trade. Their samples will be shown early in January for import only at special prices.

In Greenshields' E department such lines as hosiery, underwear, shawls, gloves, mitts, and all kinds of fancy knitted goods, are being delivered better than last Fall. There is a tendency among retailers to sort up stock in above goods earlier than last year, as several of them were held back by slow deliveries and lost sales of quantities of the goods.

In the handkerchief department the stock is complete in all lines, including fancy embroidered Irish and Swiss goods. They show an exceptionally good range of ladies' and men's initialed handkerchiefs in lawn, linen and Jap silks. They show also a special line of handkerchiefs in ½ dozen fancy boxes, suitable for gifts and the Christmas trade.

Greenshields' ribbon department report good business in all lines. Plain taffetas are in largest demand at present. Their stock is complete and all lines are shown at reasonable prices. They also have a large stock of fancy Dresden ribbons in different widths, running from Nos. 5 to 80. Prices range in this line from 6 cents up. Velvet ribbons, exceptionally scarce a few months ago, are now shown in 40 different shades, also in various widths. Prices vary accordingly.

Travelers are on the road showing Autumn range of ladies' and children's hosiery in the following numbers: All-wool rib goods, A166 and A170, extra good values, to retail at 25 cents; A174, special all-wool worsted, at $3.25 per dozen; W3 line, extra heavy double knee, all worsted, and suitable for ordinary wear or overstocking, at $4 per dozen (small sizes in proportion). In rib cashmere hosiery a full range in all lines to retail at 25, 35 and 50 cents in stock.

The glove department is exceptionally busy on Ringwood gloves. They are showing lines in all shades ranging from $2 to $6.50 per dozen.

Wm. Cummings & Sons.

Wm. Cummings & Sons, Truro, N.S., have built up a strong ready-to-wear garment business in the Maritime Provinces, with a growing outside trade, as a result of careful attention to every detail in modern garment-making. Quality is the backbone of all their output of coats, suits and skirts, and their organization is well able to look after retailers' interests. The Cummings brand has an enviable reputation. Their wholesale dry goods department is steadily increasing in volume, and they make a policy of securing exclusive lines.

Mark Fisher, Sons & Co.

In the new establishment of Mark Fisher, Sons & Co., Montreal, is to be found everything that is novel and in demand in men's wear. The variety of cloths and patterns is certainly sufficient to satisfy the most fastidious in ladies' costume cloths, beaver predominating. They are certainly putting in evidence the fact that there is nothing too good for the Canadian market.

H. B. Claflin Co., Ribbons.

The H. B. Claflin Company are keeping the looms going lively on ribbons. They have made unusual preparations, having stocked up largely on a number of their popular makes, at less than the market price. You will find them offering a handsome all silk, smooth faced taffeta ribbon at 2¼ cents ligne; No. 22, 67½ cents; No. 40, 78¾ cents; No. 60, 90 cents; No. 80, $1.01¼; No. 100, $1.12½. Better qualities at 2⅜, 3, 3½, 4 and 4½ cents per ligne.

In satin taffeta ribbons their sales are increasing every month; in fact, they are pushing the mill to hurry their shipments. Their printed warps have been secured at the lowest minimum cost, from buying their designs, printing the warps and weaving with a double-faced satin border. Christmas ribbons, with holly and berries, are a big feature of their stock.

John Macdonald & Co.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, are realizing more and more as the seasons come and go, the importance of the assorting season, and are, therefore, giving greater attention to requirements of the trade during this season. Every department in their large warehouses on Wellington and Fronts Sts. east, is fully assorted with just the kind of goods that are in demand. Never before have they had such a large stock as they have at present, and taking into consideration the state of the market, have never shown better values.

In their carpet and housefurnishing department you will find exceptional values in Brussels and tapestry carpets and carpet squares in a big range of makes, designs and sizes. A big feature in this department is their extensive range of linoleums and floor oilcloths, curtains, covers and quilts.

Their men's furnishings department is famed from ocean to ocean for the suitableness and superior value of the stock carried therein. In haberdashery and smallwares they can meet the demand for any article required, let it be ever so small. This department is headquarters for dressmakers' supplies and tailors' trimmings. Nowhere in Canada can there be found such an assortment of dress goods, silks, ribbons, laces, ladies' underwear, ready-to-wear goods, hosiery and gloves in one department as can be seen here. The time-saving in buying, and the assurance of good value, can only be fully realized by merchants placing their orders with John Macdonald & Co., Limited.

In their woolen department are to be found the latest novelties in suitings, coatings and pantings. They are selling agents for the famous Belwarp goods. Their Oakland, King Edward and Canada serges are made specially for their own trade and cannot be procured anywhere else.

John Macdonald & Co., Limited, as usual, are doing a large business in staples and linens. They have been recognized the staple house of Canada for half a century, notwithstanding the keen competition that has from time to time been faced. In linen tablings, towelings and towels they are unequaled.

You will see by their advertisement that they are putting into operation a new system of attending to the assorting trade, and ask you to correspond with them if you are interested. Their letter order department is in full swing, and if you want goods quick and your correspondence satisfactorily attended to, send them you letter orders.

L. Hirshson & Co.

L. Hirshson & Co., Montreal, have just received a large stock of novelties and fancy goods suitable for the Christmas trade. These goods are now all assorted, and are available for immediate delivery. Visiting buyers are invited to call when in the city. They are centrally located at 4 Dollard street, off Notre Dame.

Greenshields Western.

Greenshields Western, Limited, Winnipeg, inform The Review that their Fall and Winter stocks are complete, and they are prepared to execute sorting orders on very short notice. They have a particualrly handsome line of skirts to clear at the factory price, $2.10 each. This is line No. 992, and it consists of tweeds and plain colors in light and dark tweeds. Special attention will be given mail orders for these skirts. Fall lines of ladies' flannelette underwear, children's dresses, ladies' fine neckwear, etc., are complete.

A cabinet containing a 100-dozen assortment of pearl buttons, to retail at 5 and 10 cents, is one of the Greenshields Western leaders now attracting the attention of the trade. This cabinet contains a particularly good assortment, and there is a nice profit for the dealer. A large new stock of back and side combs has been received in the smallwares department. This department is making a leader of a nice line of dressed dolls, in prices ranging from 50 cents to $10 each.

The men's furnishings department is carrying a big stock bought before the rise in prices. Repeat orders can be filled at the old prices. This department has just received a splendid new range of neckwear, and it is specializing this Fall on fancy vests for Fall and Winter wear.

Greenshields Western report a big demand for "Sanitas" wall covering, and "Meritas," a line of table oilcloths. These are shown in many fancy and tasty designs and colors, and a big stock is carried.

A big stock of window shades was bought before the rise and, although there have been several advances in the factory prices since the first of the year, Greenshields Western are still able to sell at the old figures. An immense line of comforters and blankets is now in stock. Greenshields Western say this is the biggest and best stock they have ever had, and prices are right.

Wax Figures Par Excellence.

Canadian merchants, department managers and window dressers, when they go to New York should not fail to visit the wax department at J. R. Palmenberg's Sons, 710 Broadway. It is one of the sights of the American Metropolis. The creations have been declared by critics to be more nearly life-like than any similar exhibit made elsewhere in the world. Even the famous Tissaud's is declared behind in this respect, while the workmanship, modeling and coloring displayed by the Eden Musee has been pronounced surpassed by the Palmenberg exhibit. There are glass cases after glass cases filled with the most exquisite models of fascinating womanhood. Their hair, eyes, lips, teeth (when they are shown), complexion, finger nails, etc., are very remarkable, and one never tires of admiring the marvellous art that can so realistically produce in color and contour the superb busts and shoulders that these wax figures possess. As show pieces they certainly are magnetic, and the drawing power, that they, appropriately gowned or robed in furs, would have in a window or department can not be overestimated.

We advise all who are not going to New York this season to write to the Messrs. Palmenberg for their new catalogue No. 15L, which tells, in handsome pictures and descriptive text, all about this remarkable showing of wax figures.

Brereton & Manning, Furs.

Brereton & Manning inform us that business is good. Orders are large, particularly for fine quality fur-lined garments, of which they make a specialty and show a very large range of samples. There is also a good demand for choice Persian jackets made without trimming. These they show in several select designs. Prices for skins continue high, and there is no prospect of any reduction. The Canadian muskrats, which they use for linings and also make into auto and other coats, are very scarce.

313 New York Life Bldg., MONTREAL

$2.75 per pair; 4,000 dozen ladies' and gents' linen hemstitched handkerchiefs, can be retailed for 10 to 25 cents. These were cleared, and are being offered at quotations of 1905. You know how many advances there have been on linen goods since that date. Wool knitted goods in endless variety, ladies' golf and bolero jackets, knitted and honeycomb shawls, ice wool squares, white bearskin coats, hoods, caps, ruffs, toques, bootees, infantees, fascinators, clouds.

Bolero jackets and golf jerseys, ladies' and misses'. A well selected assortment kept in stock.

Brock's quotations for 2 and 3-ply wheeling yarns, 3 and 4-ply fingering yarns, 3 and 4-ply worsted yarns, Saxony yarns, Shetland floss, should interest you, as they placed contracts very early, and received benefits which they are prepared to share with you.

Ladies' rainproof mantles—All styles and prices kept in stock. 1,000 men's Oxford grey rainproof coats that they are selling in lots of 25 or 50 coats at a time. "The Leader"

You can sell this coat for $7 or $8, worth $10. It is tailor-made, grey covert cloth.

Clearing out at great sacrifice some odd sizes and broken ranges of men's and women's raincoats and waterproof mantles.

Brock's "Nubilda" kid glove, in black, tan, grey, brown and navy, retails at $1. It is splendid value.

Large success has come to these works in the re-dyeing, cleaning, and curling of fine plumes and feathers. Milliners all over Canada have learned the value of our service.

The Strongest Point

OF THE

Brand Collar is the weakest point of all other collars. The buttonhole is made to wear as long as any other part of the collar, but comfort is not sacrificed. No trouble to button it.

"J" Brand Collars retail at 3 for 50c., with a good profit for the dealer. We would like to have an opportunity to show you the range of styles in "J" Brand.

Our Derby Quality—two for a quarter—collar is a winner, and cannot be beaten at the price.

PRIESTLEYS' HUGUENOT CLOTH

Their Latest Creation

Priestleys' All-Wool "Huguenot" cloth is a combination of beauty, suppleness and durability which will add to the reputation of these celebrated makers.

"Huguenot" cloth possesses all the durability and close texture of the old time serge, with the soft, rich draping qualities of a French cashmere.

YOU NEED IT. YOUR CUSTOMERS WANT IT.

Fresh Stocks of Desirable Merchandise

¶ Early and favorable contracts enable us to make prompt deliveries in many lines at considerably lower prices than present market values. Stock sorting has also brought to light goods that we wish to clear and will prove well worth a call of inspection, as they are all examples of the "Revillon" standard of quality and value.

Taffetas

Black and leading Colors

Special lines at prices ranging from

Silks in Vogue

Notwithstanding the firmness of the silk market, prevalent at this season, you will find our quotations lower than current market prices.

From our large and varied stock of Taffetas (yarn and piece dyed) we draw your especial attention to our special "Revillon" finish lines, which means a durable and reliable article.

Some of our lines we guarantee to stand two seasons' wear.

Fancy Silks, new checks and stripes, Damas 2/3 lats, Facounes, Pekin, Moire, on Faille or Satin Grounds.

Ribbons

Plain Taffeta and Duchesse, 2 in. to 70 in. lignes.

Velvet Ribbons in all shades, from width No. 1 to 16, and in black to 40 lignes.

Fancy Silk Ribbons, a full range of newest designs

Particular attention is called to the superiority of texture, colors and finish of our ribbons.

Laces

Our complete stock of Vals, Guipures, Princesse, Point de Gaze and Duchesse Laces is surpassing all previous records in attractiveness.

Boas, Ostrich Feathers and Marabout

Prices range in above from $3.25 to $84.00 each.

Samples cheerfully submitted or mailed. Special and prompt attention paid to letter orders.

¶ Our range of Prints for Spring, 1908, will be very much larger than usual.

¶ Crum's Prints will be the same old standard, although most English manufacturers have introduced inferior cloths to come in at a price.

¶ If you handle Crum's again this year you can bank on them being the same quality as last year or any previous year.

¶ Our "116 Print" at ten cents is the best value in Canada. It is 31 to 32 inches wide, very fine in quality and fast dye.

¶ Our "125" quality is also a special print. It is 32 inches wide, as fine in quality as any Print in the market, and our price is 10½ cents.

"I've Now More Than I Can Read"

¶ Yes, Mr. Business Man, we are well aware you have not time to read all the publications that come your way each month.

¶ But do you really devote the time you should to reading? Do you get the timely and instructive articles which a man in your business should read in order to be up to date?

¶ Isn't a great part of your time spent in ransacking the various publications in search of these articles? Think of the advantage of having them selected for you each month. How much more profitable your time devoted to reading would be. This is exactly what

MEN AND METHODS

A Quebec Store Which Finds Credit Selling System Preferable to Cash—Another Which Gives Farmers Six Months' Credit.

A PROGRESSIVE MERCHANT.

J. A. Decelles, Farnham, Que., believes in the efficacy of many forms of good advertising—newspaper, circular, window display, etc. The store is 50 x 50 feet, two floors, and, as in the majority of those in Quebec Province, general lines are carried. General dry goods lines are on the ground floor. Glass top counters are used, and drawers immediately below contain fancy goods, trimmings, etc. Boots and shoes, house furnishings and ready-to-wear garments are on the upper floor.

The firm name is to be changed shortly, as J. A. Morisseau, head clerk, is to be admitted to partnership.

Store of Peter McSweeney Co., Moncton, N.B.

SPLENDID NEW STORE AT MONCTON.

The magnificent new home of The Peter McSweeney Co., lately erected on Main St., Moncton, is perhaps the largest store of its kind in the Maritime Provinces. The firm certainly believe in the future of Moncton, and of the eastern provinces generally, and have given a practical demonstration of their faith.

Senator McSweeney, president of the company, had his early training with Doherty & McTavish, of St. John, leaving them after eleven years' service to go to Moncton, in 1868. That year McSweeney Bros. & Co. was started, to be succeeded, in 1877, by McSweeney & Co. The premises in which the business was carried on were 20x40 feet.

The dimensions of the new building are 63x130 feet, four stories high. The floor space available is 32,280 square feet. One month's business now is equal in volume to what was done the whole of 1877.

The mail order department, recently established, is somewhat of a new departure, but it is working very successfully.

The store is divided into ten departments. Among the lines carried are: Dress goods and silks, staples, ladies' ready-to-wear garments and millinery, furs, fancy goods and notions, men's furnishings and clothing, carpets, wall paper, etc. Several other departments are in contemplation.

The new building is a credit to the city, imposing and neat, and imparting an air of progress and stability to the whole street. It is of up-to-date construction, and contains all the latest ideas to facilitate the handling of a large volume of trade. This, combined with a live management and large and growing centre, makes success and expansion something naturally to be expected.

AGGRESSIVE AND UP-TO-DATE.

J. Mullin, Sons & Co., Granby, Que., conduct a general dry goods store on up to-date, aggressive lines. They do a splendid clothing, tailoring and shoe business. Among other lines represented are ready-to-wear garments and house furnishings. The large central entrance divides two exceptionally spacious and deep show windows, which are kept well trimmed. The store interior is bright and attractive. There is an evident desire to show goods, and displays are excellent. Fancy goods occupy the space right in front of the entrance. Fixtures in the various departments are a noticeable feature. Stock boxes are used for hosiery and gloves. Some of the departments seem crowded, as if the business had outgrown its present accommodation.

SIX MONTHS' CREDIT.

Granby, Que., a town of some 5,000 population, is one of the live centres of the Eastern Townships, perhaps the most populous and progressive district of the province. The general dry goods store of A. C. Lapage, Son & Co., is about 88 x 100 feet, two floors and basement--a roomy premises for the size of the town. The firm was established some forty years ago, and the building, especially the interior, is by no means modern, although improvements have been made from time to time. It is really in two sections, a forty-foot addition having been erected some time ago. General dry goods and boots and shoes occupy one side of the main floor. Men's furnishings, ready-to-wear garments and millinery are on the other side. Modern fixtures are not employed to any extent, and up-to-date systems are lacking. The upper floor accommodates a good stock of men's clothing and a large tailoring establishment.

Six months' credit is accorded the farming community and about thirty days to factory hands.

DROPPED THE CASH SYSTEM.

Loud & Desnoyers is the style of the largest general dry goods store in Farnham, Que., an agricultural and railroad centre of about 3,500 population. The premises are modern in structure, 53 x 60 feet and four storeys in height, all occupied by the firm. The stock carried runs close to $50,000, and comprises general dry goods, house furnishings, men's furnishings and clothing, ladies' ready-to-wear garments, and boots and shoes. Stock arrangement and window and interior displays are only fair in comparison to those found in Ontario towns of similar size, but this store averages up better than the majority of those in Quebec towns of equal importance.

The ready-to-wear department looks exceptionally well. A fitting room is provided for ladies' lines. Oilcloths are carried on upright roller fixtures. Reserve stock is kept in a commendably orderly way.

The cash system was tried in this store last year, but was abandoned. Sales decreased and gross profits were curtailed. One of the partners, speaking to The Review, said that credit losses are slight—only about $50 on a turnover of $45,000. Railroad help and farmers need credit, and credit sales are more easily made.

The Review is told that Farnham is a good customer of Toronto mail order houses, even though it is not very far from Montreal. One Toronto concern ships catalogues there by freight, and hires a rig and driver to have them distributed from house to house throughout the town and district. Local retailers are taxed $2 on every $1,000 of stock; mail order houses pay nothing to the municipality.

UNION BRASS CO. GOODS.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Union Brass Goods Company, Limited, Toronto, with a capital of $150,000, divided into $100 shares. The object of the company is: "To carry on business as brass and iron founders; to manufacture, buy, sell and deal in goods, wares and merchandise made in whole or in part of brass, copper, iron and other metals."

BUSINESS MAN'S TEN COMMANDMENTS.

1. Thou shalt not in any wise boast, brag, bounce or bluster, or the wise man will hold thee in low esteem.

2. Thou shalt not permit thy wife to be living at the rate of £200 a year when thy business is not yielding more than £199; nor shalt thou withhold from her the business information which, as a helpmeet, she is entitled to receive.

3. Thou shalt not mock the unsuccessful man, for he may be richer in his poverty than thou art in thy boasted abundance.

4. Thou shalt not carry the counting-house into the domestic circle, nor in any wise spoil the children's hour by recapitulating the bankruptcies of the day.

5. Thou shalt not hob nob with idle persons, nor smoke with them, nor encourage them, nor approve their evil life.

6. Thou shalt not keep company with an unpunctual man, for he will certainly lead thee to carelessness and ruin.

7. Thou shalt not forget that a servant who can tell lies for thee may one day tell lies to thee.

8. As to hours of slumber and sleep, remember the good old rule:

Nature requires five,
Custom gives seven;
Laziness takes nine,
And wickedness eleven.

9. Neither a borrower nor a lender be, but give where well bestowed right cheerfully.

10. Be honest in copper, and in gold thy honesty will be sure.

BERLIN LEATHERETTE CO.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Berlin Leatherette Company, Limited, Berlin, with a capital of $40,000, divided into $100 shares. The object of the company is "to acquire and take over as a going concern, the business of manufacturing and dealing in artificial leather, now carried on at Berlin, under the firm name of the Berlin Leatherette Co."

What Advance to Add for Profit.

Why it is Necessary to Set Slightly Higher Prices in Some Localities Than in Others—Two Businesses Compared to Illustrate This Point—An Exact Method Should be Employed.

By Howard R. Wellington.

It is a very difficult matter, unless a business has been running for a few years, to arrive at a fixed percentage to add to cost which will yield a fair profit after the goods are sold. Usually selling prices are based on percentage varying from 25 per cent., 30 per cent., 33 1-3 per cent., 40 per cent., 45 per cent. to 50 per cent. and up, according to the class of goods. We will compare two cases, which differ considerably as to running expenses, although the sales are the same, and it will be seen why it is necessary to get slightly higher prices, according to the district in which the business is located.

We assume, for the purpose of illustration, that the stock of goods on hand at commencement of operations and at the close amounts to the same.

Dr.		Per cent.
Purchases	$42,000	0.70
Salaries	8,500	14.16
Rent and taxes	2,000	3.33
Insurance, light, heat, etc.	900	1.5
Stationery	300	.5
Interest and discount	750	1.25
Freight and express	700	1.16
General expense	2,500	4.17
Advertising	450	.75
Net profit	1,900	3.18
	$60,000	100
Cr.
Sales	$60,000

The above percentages are figured on the sales thus: The purchases, $42,000, are 70 per cent. of the sales.

It will be noticed that if the percentage (about 43 per cent.) added to the cost for selling price in Fig. 1 were also added as a basis in Fig. 2, the net profit, on account of the additional expenses, would be considerably reduced, and it would be necessary to advance a higher percentage to maintain a fair average profit (about 49 per cent.).

Owing to the increased expenses, naturally a higher price should be received for the goods, but notice that the difference in the total percentage added for profit is only about 6 per cent. increase.

An article costing $1 would sell in the first store for $1.45, and in the second for $1.55, an increase of 10 cents per article, yard, etc., as the case may be.

An article costing, say, $10, would sell in the first store for $14.30, and in the second for $15.

It is only fair to the customer and consumer that a fair, systematic method be employed to arrive at a reasonable selling price, and the best method is to collect all the expense accounts at the end of the year and figure the percentage of each to the whole. If any particular account appears out of proportion it can then be analyzed and certain expenses cut down, or, if this is not possible, an additional percentage will have to be added to the cost price.

In figuring selling prices a number of merchants add a certain percentage for freight, for general expense, etc., and then the profit desired. This is a good plan, but you should figure on the results obtained, by actual experience, in the totals of these respective accounts, at the end of a period.

Allowance is made, too, for bad debts, contingencies, etc., and this may be added in with the general expense.

AN IRISH POPLIN PROSECUTION.

Considerable trade interest attaches to the decision of the Clerkenwell police court magistrate in regard to the prosecution by an Irish manufacturing firm of Messrs. A. W Gamage, Limited, for exposing for sale, as Irish poplin, ties which, although composed of genuine poplin, were not of material made in the Emerald Isle, says the Drapers' Record. Messrs. Gamage, it appears from the evidence, did not specifically describe them as Irish, but were guilty of the indiscretion (as it now appears) of inscribing on the window card a representation of the shamrock, which, the prosecution contended, produced by association of ideas an impression that they were so in the public mind. The defendant company strenuously denied that they had any intention of producing that impression by the use of the device, which was simply employed because it was artistic and attractive as an embellishment. They, too, pointed out that such diverse articles as fancy toilet soaps, dry batteries, and toothbrushes were sold with a shamrock device as the trade mark. The magistrate, however, held that Ireland, possessing a reputation in respect of poplin, was implied by the use of the pictorial embellishment in question, and imposed a fine on Messrs. Gamage. The moral to the drapery trade is obvious. If the display of a shamrock is held to constitute a definite declaration of Irish origin in connection with poplin ties, doubtless the contention can be advanced with equal reason and success relative to linen goods, damasks, and other textiles, which are largely produced in Ireland. It is more than ever necessary to exercise extreme care that the window tickets employed are above suspicion in regard to accuracy of wording and freedom from ambiguity.

"I'm satisfied," said the angry tailor, "that you intend to cheat me out of this money."

"All right," chuckled the happy debtor, "If you're satisfied, I am."

Good Advertising

How to Produce It

Brief Talks Given Monthly
By T. Johnson Stewart

"The advertising man who is not a salesman, like the lawyer shy on law, goes begging for clients."—Rusty Mike's Diary.

Have you ever been a party to a lawsuit? I have; and equipped with the knowledge that comes of bitter, costly experience, I am resolved never again to enact a similar role. Litigation is a diversion fit only for a bloated plutocrat, who doesn't have to expend a thought upon the subjects of next Winter's coal or new shoes for the baby.

At some time or other you may feel that the only course open to you is an appeal to the courts of justice, perhaps to establish your right to certain properties—or for any one of a thousand other reasons. Don't get blue in the face about it, and rush off at once to set the machinery of the law in motion. In the first place, you're liable to bring on an attack of apoplexy, and in the second, it will pay you to reflect that operation of this machinery is a mighty expensive process. The necessary motive power doesn't come from Niagara Falls; it can only be supplied by real dollars, and you can never figure on how many you will have to burn up before you get through. See, first, if there is not some way of arriving at an amicable settlement. If you conclude that such is impossible, then consult the best lawyer in your town - the best, remember. Don't be bothered with a second-rate man, even though he would exact a much smaller fee.

That's just where I made my big mistake the time I got mixed up in matters legal—I was not careful to secure the advice and services of a lawyer who knew his business. An acquaintance to whom I confided the particulars of the case had a friend, a member of the profession, and recommended that I call on him. I did. The man didn't impress one very strongly, but I told my story and he listened attentively, from time to time asking sundry questions bearing upon certain features of it. At its conclusion, he urged that I permit him to enter action at once and appeared so enthusiastic over my prospects of winning that I—innocent idiot that I was—placed myself in his hands. I had a strong case—I was convinced of that; but the verdict went against me because I had a fool lawyer to present my claims to the judge and jury. He had good material to work on, but he marshalled his points with about the same degree of organization as existed in Coxey's army.

Some merchants talk to the public through newspaper space, with just about as much skill as this lawyer used in handling my plea in the courtroom. Why? Simply because they haven't got down to the root of the matter and absorbed a few of the fundamental principles of advertising. Their publicity is not worthy of the merchandise they carry, and yet they expect it to be effective! Now, what is their reason for buying space in the local papers? Because they believe it will help them to sell goods—any one of them will tell you that. Then we might surely expect to find it filled with matter that could accurately be described as "Printed Salesmanship."

Every ad. should act as a salesman for the store whose goods it represents, and solicit business in every home where it is read.

Many a merchant used arguments in his ads.—alleged arguments, I should say, for they have never been found guilty of selling goods—that he wouldn't think of employing over his counter. In the latter instance, he is face to face with a customer and knows that he must talk reasonably if he is to make a sale. Ask him and he cannot but admit that if he adopted the tone of some of his ads. the customer would be apt to conclude that he didn't credit her with ordinary intelligence. How, then, does he figure out that such arguments are going to appeal to the same lady when she reads them in the newspaper at home? He doesn't actually believe that they will, when you get him to reason it out with you. It is just that he has never reasoned it out with himself in the same way. He does not yet appreciate the ability of a good ad. to sell goods.

Here is an advertising talk that is well worth reading, particularly as it fits in with some of the points which I have emphasized in the foregoing paragraphs. It is written by the adman with a dry goods store that uses space very liberally:

"A GREAT STORE, THIS"

Sarnia, 29th August, 1907.

—Has been becoming greater, stronger and more far-reaching in its influence and admittedly unmatchable merchandising supremacy from the very first day it opened its doors on the 9th day of September, 1867—a long record of unbroken, unalloyed and possibly, unprecedented success, taking everything into consideration—and every year the rival and vanquisher of its own past - having no other competitor to contend with—is it not?

This Fall it's asserting itself as never before. Every country in the world contributes to its demands, its needs, its constant sending out, its constant coming in—nothing stays here long—this business is ever "kaleidoscopic" in its exclusiveness.

Even in its carpet and house furnishing trade alone it's endorsed by everyone within shopping distance of its attractiveness, its inimitableness—no one disputes this statement of fact because it's indisputable. We buy bigger, closer, in greater variety, control more stocks, more varieties, more prices, more values, more inducements—always make good—or stand prepared to refund. What more could anyone ask? It's a standing offer. You can always depend upon it test it—try it—plenty of room—ample light—gigantic stocks—best values—are what are here.

The Dress Goods controller and distributor of Sarnia and the County of Lambton is this, has always been, is to-day. Who disputes it? No one, because it's indisputable. One season's successes are never a high enough mark for the next. Rare taste, gigantic stocks, unexampled values, quick buying and selling all the time, no weak spots, no excuse places, everything on its merits, everything as represented, are the bulwarks, the foundation, the argument of this business—let the chips fall where they may.

During July and August this store has closed at 5 o'clock every afternoon, Saturdays excepted (the only store in Sarnia to occupy the position). We have enjoyed it, our employes have enjoyed it, the business has enjoyed it; we trust our friends in the trade who felt they couldn't afford to (consistent or inconsistent in all their emergencies) have enjoyed it. Keeping open until 6 o'clock, commencing the 1st of September, will be the rule here.

THOS. SYMINGTON & CO.

Telephone 36. Christina & Front Streets, Sarnia.

Here is another one of those unique ads. which Thomas Symington & Co. run every week in the Sarnia papers. This is the third that I have reproduced, not because I like to criticize Mr. Symington's publicity methods more than anyone else's, but because the ads. he writes are really curiosities. There's one thing about him—he is original. I don't know of any other drygoodsman who would pay good money for newspaper space, and then expect this sort of copy to sell goods for him. It certainly will not do so, and I wonder how long it's going to take Mr. Symington to tumble to that fact. Here we will leave him for the present. If I started in to criticize the accompanying ad. I would have room for nothing else this month.

Talk is cheap, they say.

And so it is. But store-talk, paid for at so much per, comes pretty high. You know this if you've ever footed the advertising bills.

Now, we use space pretty freely, as you may have noticed. We do some talking ourselves. We pay for it freely and cheerfully. But we want to state right here that there are some kinds of advertising, some kinds of store-talk that we simply can't afford. They come too high for us. Price is too big.

This is the way of it:

An advertisement that overstates or understates deceives folks. They may fall into an easy way of discounting what you have to say and of making their own allowances for shading of the truth. But even if they do, and even if they come to buy what you've offered, even if your pleasant newspaper fiction has been swallowed with the proverbial pinch of salt, do you think the cost of the space is all you have to pay?

No, sir! Next time the pinch of salt will probably have to be larger—for it's a mighty easy thing to let the overstating habit get a hold. And your actual bill will be so many dollars for space plus a loss of confidence in your store-talk.

If you will pause, you will just here begin to perceive the ultimate eventuation of such a process. In other words, if you are ordinarily bright, you can see your finish.

This is one kind of advertising that we can't afford, because, from our viewpoint, to lose one iota of the public's confidence would be an incalculable loss.

Then, there's the kind that is flamboyantly and unashamedly untruthful. Double-barrelled adjectives, wild bursts of galvanic enthusiasm, box-car announcements of stupendous, tremendous, col-lossal doings, that, if true, would put the very foundation of commerce rattling.

Of course, we cannot afford this style. Not only our ethical sense revolts, but our idea of good form and good taste as well.

As the text-books on rhetoric say, we study what is due to the reader.

That's just the point with us. Yet, there is something due to ourselves as well. And we are not fond of boomerangs ; advertising boomerangs, especially.

"Well," you say, "how in the name of Providence can you afford the kind of advertising you do put out? Poetry and flowers, philosophy and rainbows, frilly talk about plain things, sentiment and ethics, and all that sort of stuff?"

So you've been reading us, Mr. Critic. You've been caught by the glint of the flowers and the prismy dash of the rainbows after all. And maybe some stray idea of ours on the ethics of storekeeping or the philosophy of doing sincere work has helped you along. We hope so.

Advertising is the medium through which we become known to the world. We choose to make our advertising truthful, sincere, genuine, and, incidentally, as interesting as we can. We will not shade truth for a paltry dollar ; we will not warp a fact for passing gain. We will not misrepresent nor ask the public to take any salt whatever with the advertising pabulum we furnish.

And so when we foot the bills there won't be any unwritten settlements to make with character and conscience, there won't be any extra charges in the way of lost confidence and a disappointed patronage.

We cannot afford any such.

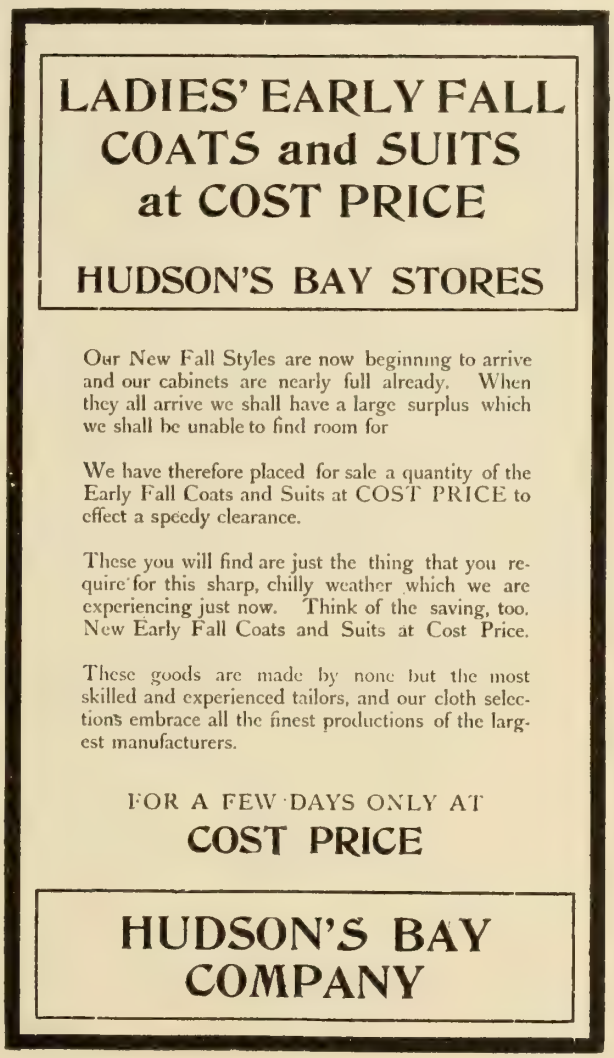
The matter used in the Fall opening announcement of the John White Co., Woodstock, is just about the best I have seen in a good while. It has the proper "tone" necessary to impress upon the public the elegance of the new season's goods—style and quality are emphasized throughout. Not a price is mentioned. The merit of this feature may be questioned by some, but I have no fault to find with such a policy when applied merely to opening announcements by stores which, like this one, cater to the better class of trade. Of course price is always an important consideration, but it may safely be set aside when the strongest point to be brought out is the "brand" newness of the merchandise. A good many ad. men slop over when they try to prepare copy of this nature. There is no necessity for becoming too effusive ; it is simply a matter of telling a good story in the most attractive way possible.



Typographically, this ad. could be improved. For one thing, it did not "print up" well. Then I do not see the necessity for running the firm name both top and bottom. If placed at the bottom only, the appearance would have been much improved. However, the ad. is easily read, and, after all, that is the main consideration, after the subject matter which it contains.

"Ladies' early Fall coats and suits at cost price."—Hudson's Bay Company, Edmonton.

I have reproduced the ad. from which this is taken. It appeared in one of the Edmonton papers on August 21. Even if they were absolutely correct, the Hudson's Bay Company surely doesn't expect the public to credit the statements made therein. I know what I would think if I were a customer of this store and one of the people to whom such publicity was expected to appeal. I would conclude that the man who dictated the text of the ad. either didn't believe the ladies of Edmonton were possessed of any fair amount of common sense, or he was woefully short on merchandising knowledge. Further, I would say : "Those coats and suits are, no doubt, some that were carried over from Spring, and I am expected to swallow the story that they are the first arrivals of the new Fall stock, which the company is anxious to hand out to its customers without expecting a cent of profit. If this be the case, I can only say that it is mighty poor business."

Please remember that the public is capable of figuring these things out for itself, and such an ad. as the one I am discussing is likely to antagonize a great many more people than it attracts.

Interesting Extracts and Ideas

"Why not get the up-to-date articles when you are buying? It costs you no more, and it is certainly more satisfactory to you, as well as to us."—The Acme Company, Limited, Edmonton.

"Belts—almost every conceivable shapely style is present in all colors and combinations, besides black and white."—David Spencer, Limited, Vancouver.

"This Rummage Sale is the John White Co. way of making a quick clearance of remainders, remnants, broken lots, odds and ends—a quick switch from one season to another."—The John White Co., Woodstock.

"We do not often hold bargain sales, but when we do, they are genuine."

"There's not a woman who doesn't like pretty, soft draperies round the house, and the chance to replace old or worn ones with these dainty new muslins is here now."—James Stark & Sons, Limited, Vancouver.

"This firm makes a specialty of fine art dressmaking."—G. B. Ryan & Co., Berlin.

"With characteristic enterprise we are asserting our style supremacy by a preliminary display of fascinating Fall fashions. The air of exclusiveness and novelty, which is their chief characteristic, bespeaks a decided step in advance in the fashioning of clever wearing apparel for women. We give here the features that are to rule this season."—The Regina Trading Company, Regina.

"August, a busy month. Sounds strange, doesn't it? Who ever heard of this month being a busy one with a dry goods store? The system of storekeeping has changed. Goods are no longer hoarded; they are given due time to sell, and if they fail the up-to-date merchant gets after them at once, by forced methods—by reducing prices."—G. B. Ryan & Co., Guelph.

"Men seldom rush for bargains, but they drop in and buy just the same."—Manchester, Robertson, Allison, Ltd., St. John.

"Citizens in sympathy with shorter hours will please note that we close our store at 6 p.m. daily, Saturdays included."—Bryson, Graham & Co., Ottawa.

"The $1 Sale. Green tickets will guide you to bargains of real worth. Constantly-moving stocks ensure freshness and desirability, and you'll find no season's laggards, but new, clean stocks; in fact, anything that bears the green ticket is the best of its kind at the price."—W. H. Scroggie, Limited, Montreal.

"This advertisement tells more forcibly than any special comment could why this store is busy in a dull month."—J. H. Chapman & Co., London.

"The first Friday after stock-taking. We've gone carefully through our entire stock—not a single piece or article of Summer merchandise has escaped our notice. In some instances there are only one or two of a kind—perhaps several, sometimes a hundred—and in every instance we have priced them with a view to making them sell on sight."—The Hamilton Co., Montreal.

"It's the price, that's all. You will find no whining, sentimental method about our way of doing business. We want you to feel that we don't want a cent of your money if we cannot give the best value you can get for it. You've got the money, and we have the goods. We only want to exchange when you are satisfied."—Miss A. Jones, general merchant, Markdale.

"Women's walking skirt, made of our special quality imported vicuna cloth, seventeen gores; front formed in graduated panel effect; stylish side, pleated all around; seams are stitched to below the hips, giving the pleats plenty of fullness around the bottom. Colors, black or navy."—The T. Eaton Co., Good descriptive paragraph.

"The store that says less and does more."—Crompton's, Brantford.

"Prettier and more perfect suits than we've ever been able to show you before. A visit to our ladies' ready-to-wear department is a liberal education as to what is new and stylish for Fall. It's always wise to make your selections early."—R. H. Williams & Sons, Regina, "The store that serves you best."

"How about the children's clothes? 'Some are in rags, and some are in tags' now at the end of vacation days, but we are exerting ourselves to the utmost to send all children to school so well dressed that they can't help entering upon their studies with earnestness and enthusiasm. Clothing bought at this store is made of better materials, it's better sewn, it fits better, it looks better, it wears better, and costs less."—Hudson's Bay Stores, Vancouver.

"This store will be open every evening during haying and harvest."—J. D. Brown, Dundalk.

"Another model, strikingly handsome, is shown in a fine French broadcloth. The coat is a three-quarter style, with cutaway fronts, tight-fitting back, elaborately trimmed with silk soutache braid in self colors, touches of dainty Parisian braid and braid buttons. Lined throughout with heavy quality satin. Skirt in latest style, pleated effect, trimmed with self bands. This model is shown in maroon, myrtle, brown, navy and black, and is one of the most handsome we are showing."—Hudson's Bay Co., Winnipeg.

"'Move on! move on!' says the copper on the corner; we said, 'Move on! move on!' to all our summery goods and a lot of oddments and endments of staple lines; we emphasized our words with price-cutting, and they move."—Richard Hall & Son, Peterboro.

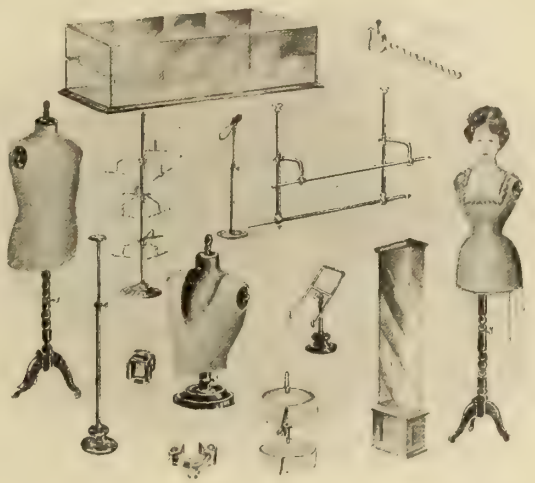
"Always special attractions—always new things—bright fresh, crisp stocks of desirable and dependable merchandise."—Hudson's Bay Stores, Vancouver.

"Muslins for Summer curtains. For the hot weather nothing gives a room such a cool, airy look and feeling as muslin curtains."—R. H. Williams & Sons, Regina.

"Our store news is always interesting, because it deals in truths and not sensationalisms."—Hudson's Bay Stores, Vancouver.

Herbert Snell, Moose Jaw, "Correct dress for women."

You'll find excuses for a new suit if you set eyes on these bargains. There's self-evident saving in every reduction that appeals strongly to stern judges of value—will appeal to you."—Mahon Bros., Halifax.



"Please note—Sale prices mean cash. We do not send sale goods on approval. We will not reserve goods for anyone, unless a deposit is made on them." R. H. Williams & Sons, Regina.

"Our American visitors find our glove department the most interesting in the store. They see there a glove stock, which, for worthiness of makes, variety of styles, and completeness of size range, compares in every respect with that of their largest stores. But the most interesting feature of the department, and one of which they readly avail themselves, is the fact that gloves, both kid and fabric, can be had here at much lower prices than similar grades across the border. There are two reasons why this is so; the first is that the duties levied in Canada on gloves of British and foreign manufacture are considerably lower than in the United States, and the second is that we are satisfied with much less profit. Scarcely an American visitor comes into the store who doesn't buy gloves, and we frequently sell an entire year's supply to the 'wise ones.'"—Mahon Bros., Halifax.

Did You Ever Buy Cardboard for Making Show Cards?

Did you ever realize what a job it is to make good-looking up-to-date signs on cardboard? We are in a position to furnish the complete signs, delivered to you (charges prepaid), at the prices you have heretofore paid for the cardboard. We established this business in 1898 and now have customers in all parts of this country as well as Canada. Are you one of them? If not, you will want to know something about us and our cards, therefore we have arranged to send you 8 signs, 11 x 7 inches (all different), specially made up for your business, and our large Sign Book (with nearly 300 photographic illustrations), post paid for 25 cents (coin preferred). We are offering to mail you these cards at actual cost of postage and packing, so you may see their value.

The Sign Book (the only one of its kind ever published) alone is worth more than this amount to any business man, and we know you could not duplicate the equal of this offer from any other concern for several times the amount we ask of you. We will also allow you to deduct the 25 cents from your first order. Thereby you will receive this sample order entirely Free. Please remember that these cards are specially made up for your business, and you may have exclusive use of same in your city if you answer at once.

All cards mailed same day order is received. If we have the pleasure of serving you once, you will place more business with us.

WINDOW DRESSING

THE ART OF DISPLAY

INTERIOR DECORATION

Christmas Windows

Trimmers Should Plan Their Displays Now—The Importance of Early Buying and How It May Be Encouraged.

It may seem a little early to be talking of holiday displays, but as the time of most profitable selling is the first part of the season, it is not a bit too soon to lay your plans. Holiday shopping, if not directed otherwise, will all crowd itself into the last week or ten days before Christmas. The tremendous rush ties up the service of the average store pretty badly. Heavy tension is put on the selling and delivery facilities and the capacity and temper of each unit is tested to the breaking point. The staff is overworked, and customers are crowded, jostled and uncomfortable. Many sales are lost simply because all the people cannot be attended to.

Make Displays Early.

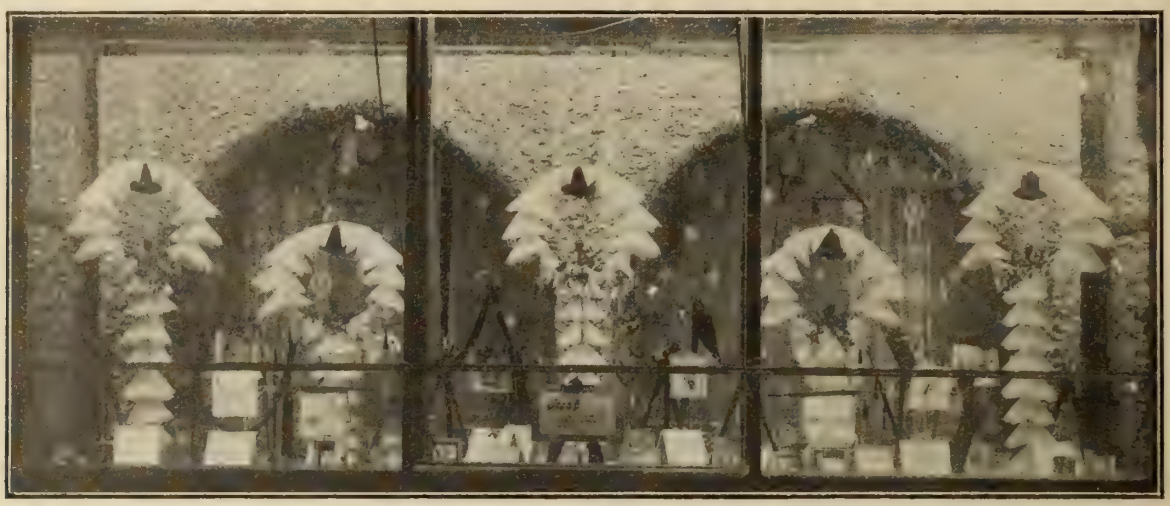
It lies within the power of the window trimmer, more than anyone else in the store, to obviate such a situation so far as it is possible to do so. If you get the ad. man to help, you can do much to induce the public to buy early. The latter part of November, or, at the very latest, the first week in December, you ought to make your windows strongly suggestive of Christmas time, while the ad. man should supplement your efforts by telling, through newspaper space, of the many advantages of shopping at that time; of being on hand when salespeople will have plenty of time to show them goods, and while stocks are fully assorted.

Special displays of holiday goods should be made not a day later than the opening of the first week in December. Even a week earlier is advisable in many cases.

No. 1—Winner of first prize in Christmas Window Competition. Display of fancy boxes and jewelry, by A. A. Garon, with Z. Paquet, Quebec.

Fancy goods and toys should not only be shown in the window, but liberal interior display should be made.

A Toy Opening.



Early in December it is a good idea to hold a "Toy Opening," and invite all the children in town to attend it. If some competition can be arranged, for the children's benefit, running up to Christmas week, and with toys as prizes, you will have them keenly interested.

They will talk Christmas in their homes, and that will assist early buying.

The Robert Simpson Co., Toronto, have, for the past four or five years, carried out the above idea, and with splendid results. The competition they conducted last year was well planned, and proved interesting to both children and grown-ups. The firm had just purchased Knox Church property for the extension of their store, and they asked the children to send in drawings of what they thought the store would look like when the new addition was made. A number of prizes were offered, and cuts of the prize-winning drawings were run in the regular advertising space.

Some competition, to arouse the spirit of Christmas at an early date, combined with clever window and interior displays, and the efforts of the ad. man to impress upon customers the advantage of early buying, ought to make life a little easier for the store staff the third week of the month.

Just a word about the necessity of taking extra precautions, at holiday time, to guard against fire. Stores are filled with inflammable goods, and special decorations add to the risk. Measures should be taken to not only obviate, so far as possible, the danger of fire, but also to check a blaze, should one unfortunately break out. Lights must not be too close to decorations or goods, and fire extinguishers, pails of water, etc., should be handy, all employes being made aware of their location. In the larger stores a fire company might be organized.

No. 2—Winner of second prize in Christmas Window Competition. Display of handkerchiefs and umbrellas by H. C. MacDonald, with Richard Hall & Son, Peterborough.

A Display Suggestion.

Attractive interior trims, that are useful as well as decorative, may be planned, with arches of bent or sawn wood, and such goods as handkerchiefs, ribbons, dolls, toys and small fancy articles may be made part of the scheme. Floral effects are the more used of decorative novelties, and probably always will be, as they give results that no other material can. Holly, of course, comes first, but the choice is a wide one. High class trimmers are buying a good deal of white foliage, combined with red berries. The list of white foliage is a long one. For instance, there is white oak vine, white grape vine, white holly, holly and grape sprays, etc. Holly comes in vine effect, and in wreaths, bells and sprays, and is combined with brilliant red berries. Folding tissue paper bells go well with white foliage. They can be had in different sizes, and the price is not high. These bells should be stocked for sale, as they are an exceedingly popular article for Christmas decoration.

Handkerchiefs, small fancy articles, dolls, toys, etc., are not easy to show, and windows of this description always take time and patience to dress. Perhaps the accompanying diagram may offer a few acceptable ideas and hints to some of the trimmers who are readers of The Review. The front section is placed about a yard or so from the back of the window. The arches are made from sawn lumber, and are covered with some bright red material. Between each arch is stretched poultry netting, topped by gilt picture molding, the netting also being gilded. The back section consists of a shelf backed by a board and covered with royal blue cloth or other material. From the shelf are three half-circles of bent wood or wire which pass through the arches on a level with the pillars or supports. Heavy rope, gilded or wrapped with the tinsel used to decorate Christmas trees, is fastened to the shelf and spaced out, hanging free, as shown in the illustration. Two Christmas trees, trimmed with tinsel, glass balls, etc., are placed upon stands between the arches. This setting can be used for a handkerchief trim and later for fancy goods and toys.

No. 4—Display of gift articles, by Louis F. Raynor, with Mahon Bros., Halifax.

"Pa!"

"Well, daughter?"

"May I have your waste basket to make a mushroom hat?"

"Yes, child. And you may also have this old feather duster for trimming."

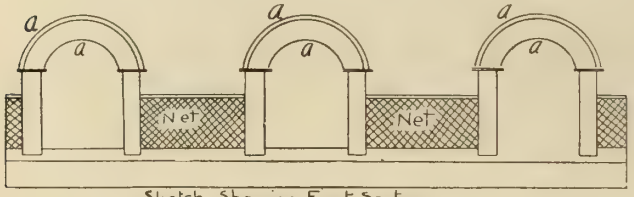
Prize-Winning Displays

The Winners of Christmas Competition—The Judges Placed Selling Quality Before Appearance.

The three prize-winning displays, in The Review's Christmas window competition a year ago, are reproduced this month, and many a trimmer may get excellent inspiration from them to assist him in making his plans for the coming holiday season.

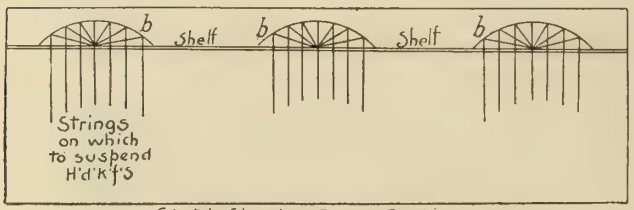
As stated at the time the winners were announced, the judges, H. Hollingsworth, of Simpson's and A. E. Apted, of Eaton's, Toronto, took into consideration, first and foremost, each window's ability to sell goods. The one which they concluded was the best seller received first prize. As will be seen, it really was not the most attractive, judged from the standpoint of appearance alone.

As an indication of the beauty of some windows that were not fortunate enough to win a prize, one of those entered by Louis F. Raynor, with Mahon Bros., Halifax, is illustrated. It must have had a very striking effect, but the question the judges asked themselves was this: "Would it sell goods?" They concluded that its selling qualities were not very marked. As a beautiful picture they could find no fault with the window, but they strongly doubted its practical value. There is a splendid lesson in this for many Review readers.



Following are descriptions of the windows shown:

No. 1.—Display of fancy boxes and jewelry, by A. A. Garon, with Z. Paquet, Quebec. Background of sateen, in wave plaiting, with bows of yellow ribbon at each corner; art nouveau frame and scene representing the three kings in the desert and two angels; at each post a gospel and candle holder; floor covered with white felt; pedestals and tables of mahogany. The window was much admired and sold a lot of goods.



No. 2.—Display of handkerchiefs and umbrellas, by

H. C. MacDonald, with Richard Hall & Son, Peterborough. Background of heavy green velour suspended on brass rod, and over this fine Brussels art curtains, giving very pretty effect; arches made of broken boxes and covered with paper, a tile shade of yellow, being first soaked in a paste made from flower and water and then puffed on, the rough parts being touched up with gold bronze; two large bells made of millinery wire and covered with crepe paper; stands on which handkerchiefs were displayed made from ordinary upright stands with hoop on top, each stand having an electric light and bell suspended from it; sixteen lights, red and green, on arches; a red light formed the tongue of each bell, from which was draped a streamer of red satin ribbon; floor covered with cream felt; natural holly used throughout; smilax entwined the arches, but does not show in photo. The size of the window is 21 x 7 feet. Mr. MacDonald states that it was a splendid seller.

No. 3.—Display of leather goods, gloves in boxes, fancy collars and belts, small statues, etc., by H. Robinson, with R. McKay & Co., Hamilton. Size of window, 19 x 7 feet; background and sides oil painted to represent Christmas Eve at twilight; color effect very striking, but lost in photo; trim very carefully carried out to correspond with painting; snow represented by white cotton batting covered with diamond dust; two small evergreen trees added to realistic effect, being covered with cotton batting and diamond dust; in centre of window a rustic bridge over a small frozen creek, which was made with mirrors and sprinkled with diamond dust to give good ice effect; such details as skate marks on ice and icicles on bridge carefully carried out; background painting made to suggest creek; ceiling hidden by drop curtains.

No. 4.—Display of gift articles, by Louis F. Raynor, with Mahon Bros., Halifax. The chief beauty of this window cannot be shown in a photograph. The church and houses were lighted up and the roofs covered with diamond dust. The effect at night was very realistic. The frozen creek was carried out in the bottom of the window with a mirror covered with diamond dust. The goods were displayed on bare twigs, apparently imbedded in the snow. The floor was covered with fine cotton wool and sprinkled with diamond dust. Size of window, 12 x 6 feet.

A CLEVER PETERBOROUGH TRIMMER.

Among the most attractive window displays illustrated in this department during the past year have been several executed by H. C. MacDonald, with Richard Hall & Son, Peterborough. All of Mr. MacDonald's work seen by The Review has been of a high order of merit. He has splendid windows, that offer excellent scope for his ability, and he takes full advantage of them. He is also a finished show card writer. A group of his cards was illustrated in The Review last month.

Christmas Window Contest

Prizes of $15, $12 and $8 Will Be Awarded for Three Best Displays—Last Year's Competition Was a Success.

The Christmas window competition held by The Review a year ago was such a decided success that it will be repeated and it is hoped that even greater interest will be aroused. Prizes will be awarded the three best displays—first $15, second $12, and third $8.

Photos to be entered in the competition must reach this office on or before February 1, 1908. The only trimmers in Canada who are barred are those with Eaton's and Simpson's.

The Review expects to receive photos of many displays of merit, outside of the three prize-winners. Some of these will be reproduced also, and for each one so used the sum of $5 will be paid. Each photo must be accompanied by full description of the trim.

THE LAW SAYS YOU MUST

Do you know that a man is obliged by law to keep a proper set of books?

The law says:

"Any man who fails and has not for five years before his failure kept proper books shall be liable to a fine of $800.00 and one year's imprisonment."

Since you must keep books of some sort, and as the law insists that you keep proper books, why not keep them properly?

It is just as easy to do a thing right as it is to do it wrong.

SHOW CARD WRITING

BY CRAFTSMAN.

Half-tone Engraving.

The term "half-tone" is really a misnomer. When the inventor of the process showed a friend the first photo-plate engraving he was told that it had only half of the tones in the original photograph; but half-tone engravings, when perfectly made, like those illustrating the price tickets in previous articles in this series, certainly show all the tones. Same of these cuts show every detail; shade, shadow and reflection can be clearly and distinctly seen.

Half-tone engravings are photographed through a glass screen. If you take a magnifying glass you can see tiny squares all over the design. For ordinary newspaper work the screen is coarser than when the printing is to be done on smooth paper. Take for example the four tickets in previous articles, Nos. 200, 201, 202 and 203. They were made just twice as large as shown and pasted on a grey card twice the size of illustrations. They were then photographed through the screen on a glass plate. Afterward the plate was placed over a polished plate of copper, having its surface specially prepared. The copper and glass plates were then exposed for about twenty minutes to a burning arc light.

The finished half-tone engraving is mounted in the same manner as an electrotype, on a wooden block. Printing with an electrotype of a half-tone is never as satisfactory as printing from the originals. It is advisable, always, however, to make an electrotype of all half-tones because they are more readily injured, and the electrotype will obviate the necessity of an expensive outlay in case of accident to the original plate.

If you want to make a booklet showing styles of garments, shoes, or any class of merchandise, send the articles to the photo-engraver. He places them in the proper position and light and then takes a photograph. If the sunlight is bright that day, your merchandise can be returned within a few hours, but you should wait several days for your half-tone "cuts."

Reduction in Engraving.

The four illustrations herewith grouped as one plate show the method for ascertaining the exact dimensions of any picture after reduction in the process of engraving to a stipulated size in width or length.

We have chosen two extreme designs, the one of the clown being upright and having, mostly heavy outlines and the other, with the boy, being horizontal or "land scape" and having, mostly faint lines. The original height of the figure of the clown was 17½ inches. In order to ascertain its width when reduced to 2½ inches in height, we proceed by carefully following these instructions:

THE SYSTEM FOR MEASURING REDUCTIONS FOR HALF TONE ENGRAVINGS IS EXACTLY LIKE THE METHOD SHOWN HERE FOR LINE-WORK

Draw a diagonal line from A to B across the picture in light blue pencil (light blue will not reproduce in the process of photo engraving, the blue rays being absorbed). With a ruler, measure from the base line to a point 2½ inches distant from the diagonal line E to D, and draw another line from that point as shown to the left of the picture, at the second point, C. You will then have a diagram of the exact dimensions of the reduced engraving and can tell by measuring from the point at the side, C, to the point at the diagonal line indicated by the arrow on our sketch at D, that the engraving will measure exactly ⅝ inches in width after reduction.

The two panels on this design are intended to be mortised, which means that as much of the inner space as is possible is cut through the engraving and also through the wooden blocks on its back, so that the printer may insert therein any desired words in type.

Such a design is excellent for newspaper advertising. The same cut may be used for a regular standing design and the type in the oblong and round panels changed every day if desired.

The same process of measurement can be observed in the second illustration. The original illustration measured 4¼ inches in length. We desire to reduce it to occupy a space of 2¾ inches in length, and wish to ascertain what its height will be when reduced. Drawing a diagonal line across its centre from A to B, and measuring from its side from the point C to a point meeting the diagonal line 2¾ inches distant, D, we find that by drawing a straight line from that point to the base of the picture at point E, the distance will be 1⅝ inches.

Measuring both of the small reduced pictures, these dimensions will be verified, and will agree with the rectangular diagrams in the original designs. This method is followed exactly when the original designs are very large, but no lines whatever are drawn across the face of the designs, which in many cases are very costly and highly prized by the artists, who do not want them defaced by lines. The method employed, instead of drawing a line across its diameter, is to place a ruler or straight-edge across the diameter and to measure the distance with another ruler from a base line or side line to the diameter. When designs are small and require enlargement the same process is employed, but it must be remembered that all lines will appear coarser and the spaces between lines proportionately wider.

When you send a picture which you wish reduced to a certain size in height or width, give only one dimension. The picture never reduces in different proportions, therefore it is only necessary to state what height or what width it is to be and the unmentioned measurement will appear in correct proportion. Write instructions on the back of design and they never get lost or misplaced

The reader will be interested to learn that the original designs, from which the two large engravings were made, were four times as high and four times as wide as those here illustrated. It will, therefore, be seen that the black outlines on the clown were three-eighths of an inch thick, and the largest dot on the right hand lower side of the clown's jacket was half an inch in diameter. The July original card was 17 inches wide and 8½ inches high.

Suppose you desired to print the clown design so that the skull cap, the lines over the eyes, the lips and the polka dots should appear in red. You would require two cuts. The second cut would be made exactly like the first one, then all the lines except those desired to appear in red would be cut off (routed out). The printer could then print red first, and after that, print the black part of the design.

If you are making a design, or have a finished design and wish to see what it would look like if all of its lines were reduced, you should have a reduction glass. These glasses are round lenses that can be bought from most opticians, mounted in a metal ring, and, if desired, also with a handle. The reduction lens is ground convex on both sides, and instead of magnifying objects, it causes the reverse effect, diminishing the size. If you take a magnifying glass, the farther you hold it from the picture, to a certain focus, the larger the picture will be. Do the same with the reducing glass and the smaller the picture will appear.

The British Markets

Retail business, as yet, is of a quiet character, but there is every prospect of the season opening up well. Buyers are back from their vacations, but visits to market are chiefly to size up the situation. Country travelers are receiving fairly heavy orders. In the shipping houses, the growth of Canadian business has been a fruitful topic of discussion.

The report of the British Consul at Lyons for 1906, just issued by the Foreign Office, shows that the silk industry there enjoyed a big year. The silk crop for 1906, though a good one, was not big enough to make up for the shortage of 1905, as well as to provide for the increased consumption. Raw silk, therefore, advanced 38 per cent. in some cases. A feature of the year's trade was the enormous increase in the production of colored silks, and the falling off in the sale of blacks. The subjoined figures show the big increase in the output of the Lyons factories in 1906, as compared with the two previous years.

The product of the Lyons factories in 1904 was valued at	£15,160,000

1905 " " "	15,710,000
1906 " " "	17,064,000

As the demand for silken fabrics is still on the increase, this year's crop will have to be a big one to meet the requirements of the looms.

The Japanese silk trade during 1906 also showed a big increase. According to consular reports, the silk fabric sales amounted to no less a figure than £4,542,125. The big demand has led to material advances in price.

Present reports in London show raw silk prices are firm, but more business would be done if stocks on hand were larger. Lyons cables state the situation there is much the same as last year. Consumption continues to absorb daily all the silk within reach. This is retarding the effect of the big new crop, and making its influence less notable. The Asiatic markets show confidence, and though fluctuating, are small sellers. It is also said the later crops do not equal the first one in China and that floods have done damage in Japan.

Bradford.

The wool year of 1906-7 is ended, and the present position and the future of the market is the all-absorbing topic in this centre. Generally the beginning of August sees a weakening tendency in wool prices due, no doubt, to absence of interest when the stress of the season is over, and, also, to the desire of wool buyers to reduce prices to the lowest possible limit before the opening of the Australasian port sales, that begin the new season.

This year the usual drop in values is absent. Prices for the finer merino wools are extremely firm, and if there is any tendency manifested, it is not in the direction of lower values. The demand for this class of wools is increasing, as fabrics made from merino wools are rapidly gaining their old supremacy in the dress world. Spinners of worsted yarns are fully sold up for months to come, and as indications do not point to any increase in the supply in the coming season, merino wools will fully maintain their price.

Recently there has sprung up a demand from sections of the home and Continental trade for English wools, both of the lustre, and now lustre variety. Considerable purchases of these wools have also been made by United States buyers. This has caused cross-breds to manifest an upward tendency. The coarser colonial cross-breds are also dearer. American buyers have taken these wools freely, and staplers have been compelled to advance prices to protect their remaining stocks.

The advancing prices of these wools will probably have a bearing upon the question of the continued life of tweeds, as a popular dress fabric. There can be no doubt that tweeds are not in as great demand as they were a few months back. Now that wool prices are again hardening, tweeds—for the reason, that no other fabric with the smartness and wear, can be produced at the price—are again favored. Tweed manufacturers are, therefore, preparing an extensive range of tweeds and friezes for the coming Spring, in new shades and colors.

Turkey mohair, and pure lustre wools, are advancing. Already large orders for bright dress goods, cloakings, etc., are being placed, for the home and colonial trade, and manufacturers of these goods promise to be busy for some time.

Manchester.

Vacation time has unsettled trade but preparations are being made for September deliveries which, taking them on the whole, compare favorably with those of last year. Plain white goods are selling well and prices are firm. There is more inquiry for flannelettes, particularly for the better qualities. Plain woven cloths are in good demand.

There is some complaint made as to the disposition of manufacturers to cancel contracts made a few months back if the slightest ground is given. A higher price would have to be paid for these goods in the market at the present time.

The outlook for the home trade is generally good, and accounts are reported to be well met.

There is more life in the export trade, but more business would be done if prices were not so high. Prospects of an improvement in Asiatic buying are held out. Business from the Continent is not heavy, and South America is not at present a free buyer. Not much new business has come round to manufacturers.

There is more inquiry for yarns than a few weeks back, but the business offered is for distant months. Holidays are now on in the Oldham district, but when they are over, production will be on a large scale. Spinners' margins are not as big as they were, but good profits can still be secured, particularly if early delivery can be given. Egyptian yarns do not show much change, and producers are well engaged.

Sir Alfred Jones, and the members of the Cotton Growing Association, entertained Winston Churchill at a banquet at the Midland Hotel. The railway to Kano, Mr. Churchill said would be finished in four years, and he urged spinners and manufacturers to take full advantage of the opportunities offered, so that they would not be at the mercy of the American speculator, nor depend upon the accident of the American Summer.

Nottingham.

Holidays are over, and the trade is settling down to brisk business. There is a big foreign call for Nottingham laces, with America as a leading customer. Canada is also buying freely, and the other colonies are taking a good share. The demand from South America is steady, and prospects for the home trade are bright.

Mills are busy and still have many orders on hand. Torchon, Cluny and Maltese are in the lead, and sets—that is, laces and insertions to match—are selling. Embroidered laces and guipures, also in sets, are coming to the front. Trimming laces, corset laces, crochet and wrap laces, are all represented in the demand. Manufacturers of nets are busy the kinds most in demand being silk veilings and tulles.

Irish Notes.

There are prospects of a further expansion in the linen trade, as manufacturers are receiving fresh orders that will keep them busy when present contracts are run out. Big orders have come from the United States, and business with Canada and Australia is increasing. Cuba, South America and the Far East are steady buyers, and Continental business is above the average. Yarns are in demand and prices are firm.

Scotland.

Glasgow linen manufacturers are busy with home and colonial orders, but buyers will not purchase yarns far ahead. Floorcloth and linoleum makers are fully engaged.

In Fifeshire, a quieter tone exists in the linen trade, but it has had no effect upon values. Manufacturers are still busy, but advance orders are not coming ahead freely. There is little export buying at present, but a speedy improvement is expected.

The Exact Cost of Doing Business

A Concrete Example of How Necessary it is to Know Just How Much it Costs to Sell Each Individual Line of Goods—An Increase of Sales, with Shrinkage of Profits Explained.

The board of directors' yearly communication lay before the general manager of the Mann Mercantile Company.

It was his first news of the proceedings of the annual meeting. For Johnston was not a member of the board of directors; in fact, no one really was—except Benjamin Mann, founder, ninety-nine per cent. owner, eleven months-of-the-year-absentee president of the Mann Mercantile Company.

So this polite and ambiguous letter to the general manager, expressing the directors' appreciation of his personal faithfulness, but also their disappointment in the year's meagre profits and their hope that the coming year would show increased results—this was really a direct message from Benjamin Mann to Oliver Johnston to the effect: "Show a bigger profit in the next twelve months—or your resignation."

Johnston's call button rasped. A word to the answering messenger boy brought in the treasurer—built on the order of Mann's directors—a glorified cashier and head bookkeeper.

The general manager went right to the point. "Braun," he said, "you and I are the only men outside the directors who know that this institution made less money this year than last, on a twenty per cent. greater volume. We were surprised, puzzled. Our one-man directorate is more than surprised. And it is up to me to find the cause and remedy it. My hunt begins to-day—the tenth of January—I want no further time handicap, for I have got to find the goal and make the run by December 31. Have you any idea as to the source of the trouble?"

"I am checkmated on this question," the treasurer replied. "You have our figures; sales nearly one-fourth more than last year—gross profits as large in proportion—all departments showing the necessary percentage of profits on the books; yet expenditures went way up and more than absorbed the additional gross profits."

"If you can't tell me, no one in this house can," Johnston said. Then, decisively—"I will know. To-morrow a new clerk comes into the executive department. Tell him everything, give him anything he wants, open up our books to him. He'll have to be the Stanley of my Livingstone in the Africa of the Mann Mercantile Company."

So, on the morning of January 11, I entered the employ of the Mann Mercantile Company as general clerk.

It was a progressive store I began to study—full of the hustle and ambition of young men, and yet well directed by the merchandising ability of its manager. The books showed the situation: An increase in volume of sales; corresponding increase in gross profits, for the margin between costs and selling price remained the same; but the expense list had taken an unwarranted increase.

It was on the expenditures that I therefore concentrated my attention.

"The first data I want to get from your books, Mr. Braun," I said to the treasurer, "are the items of expense for last year and this year."

"We can give you those in an hour," Mr. Braun answered.

The two sets of figures came to me, item by item—rent, light, heat, labor, equipment, repairs, delivery expense, supplies—all the expense accounts.

They brought out nothing startling, or even significant; the percentage of increase was uniform over all. No one item, as I had hoped, showed a comparatively greater rise, thus marking it for special attention.

"Either some adverse general condition or some broadly mistaken policy of management," I reported to Braun at the end of a day's scrutiny of the figures, "has caused this proportionately large increase in expenditure, or there is some one part or another of your store responsible for the increased expense in all lines. The next point, therefore, is to find what the increase in expenses has been by departments."

"But my books won't show that," the treasurer answered. "This is not a department store, you know, though we sell different varieties of goods. All expenses are figured in totals and charged to the store as a whole."

"But you surely have distributed your expense," I protested, "so that you know how much labor, how much rent, how much delivery expense, how much of any general expense, is to be charged to each general merchandise division of your business?"

"Nothing of the kind," the treasurer answered. "In the old days Mr. Mann, and now the present manager, have had complete and direct charge of the business; the figures of sales, which are kept by lines, and the general expense totals enable them to know the condition of the business."

The statement was made with such assurance that I was nettled.

"Why is this investigation going on," I demanded, "if these figures show the condition of the business? It's because your manager does not know the store's condition that we are making this analysis. What's the use for instance," I added, "of knowing the increase in sales by lines when you don't know whether the expense of selling those lines is increasing proportionately?"

The treasurer made no reply.

"Let me see," I asked, "the report of sales by lines for last year and also for the preceding year."

Here I struck something. Not a clue exactly, but at least something different. There was a general increase in the volume of all lines, but five lines had increased very much more than the others. I looked up the location of these lines in the store, the stock carried of each, the gross profit they showed. At the end of the day I dropped into the general manager's office.

"Have you started any new departments this year, Mr. Johnston?" I asked casually.

"Yes," he answered. "Three—although no one of them is extensive. We opened a music-box and phonograph department just before the holidays of last year. Then in the spring we introduced a line of sheet music, and as the goods seemed to be akin, we put in books a little later."

"And are there any lines of goods that you pushed harder last year than you did before?"

"You bet we did." And the salesman's spirit within him kindled his eyes. "We certainly cleaned this town up on library desks and display counters. Times are prosperous ; there have been a great many developments in this line of goods lately. Everybody seems to be putting in new equipment, and I was bound that we would get what was coming to us. I happen to know we got a good deal more. We did nearly half the business that was done in this town in these lines."

Then, as if recollecting that I would probably not be interested in the little gossip of the store, he added : "How are things going ; any news ?"

"No, not yet," as I arose and swung the door. "I won't have anything to say until I have something worth while to report."

The next morning we set two clerks from the accounting department on what turned out to be a long job—the distribution of all expenses by departments or lines of goods. It was not only a long task, but a very difficult one. It meant going over every item of expense, every payroll and invoice, charging the wages of the clerks to the goods they sold, charging each department its proportion of the rent, heat and light, according to the space it occupied, going through the delivery slips and charging each department according to the time that had been spent in the delivery of its goods. And even harder was the distribution of the general expense—the superintendence, the janitor work, the accounting and administration expense.

It was two weeks before I had all my detailed figures ready for assembling, and when I began this final stage of the work I felt like an engineer must feel when the next blow of the pick is to join the two ends of his tunnel, according as he has calculated them in his blue prints. Here I must find the trouble point—or I could find none, for my study of the business showed no other opening in the apparently strong front of the management.

It was the next morning that I went in to see Johnston with two sheets of paper in my hand.

"I have something to report," I said, significantly. And although it was his busy hour, he cleared his desk and his office.

"Have you ever thought, Mr. Johnston," I began, "of exactly how much it costs to sell a sheet of music, or a chair, or a desk, or piano ?"

"I know the percentage," he came back quickly. "My monthly reports give me that."

"But I mean in a more detailed fashion than that. Have you any idea how much clerk hire it costs to sell a chair—how much rent, how much wear and tear on equipment, on your door springs, even, in that one sale—how much of your superintendent's and your floorwalker's and your door opener's time it takes to handle that one customer ? How much it costs to enter and post the bill and collect the account on that one chair ? How much it costs you to deliver the goods ?"

"It's all in the percentage," Johnston repeated, but his answer was not so cock-sure as it had been before.

"I can tell you," I said, "how much it costs you in rent and light, and heat and clerk hire, in superintendence, in wear and tear, accounting and administration to sell, if not one chair, at least all the chairs you sold ; or all the pianos you sold, or music-boxes, or desks or books. That is more than you ever knew before, isn't it ?"

"Yes," he said, "more than I cared to know, because it is only itemizing, it is only dividing up the entire expense. As long as I know the percentage I know where we are at."

"But you don't know the percentage. You know, for instance, that your profit last year was four per cent. on all the goods you sold, taken in lump."

"Yes," was the answer.

"You have not known until this moment that while you made four per cent. on your chairs, you made six per cent. on your rugs and carpet, only one per cent. on your books, and that you lost money on the sheet music you sold, and on the musical appliances, and on the library desks, and barely played even on the counter line ?"

The general manager had the right hand drawer of his desk open before my statement was finished.

"That's impossible," he asserted, as his hand placed the last report on his desk. "On musical appliances, for instance, we made a gross profit of fifteen per cent., and our operating expenses are only ten per cent., so we made five per cent. there. On our sheet music we made a little less, I confess. The gross margin there is only fourteen per cent., but even there we made fully four per cent."

I laid my sheets down on his desk. There was a department for each sheet. First, there came the total sales of that department for the previous year by months, and then for the year before that ; opposite were the expenses for the two years by departments, itemized into the various expense accounts.

"Here is the proof," I said. "It is absolutely correct, as your accounting system will allow, and while your accounting system has not told you much, its original entries are doubtless correct. But I tell you here what the actual expense of each part of your store has been. When you come to think of it, you cannot expect it will cost exactly the same percentage of the selling price to sell a piano that it does to sell sheet music or a library table or a book. Coincidences don't come so uniformly. It may cost twice as much in percentage, to sell one article as it does another. Just because, to get your selling price, you mark all your goods up twenty per cent. from the cost price, you can't be sure that it does not cost twenty-five per cent. to sell sheet music, and perhaps only five per cent. to sell chairs.'

"But why is not your method as much a guess as ours ?" Johnston asked. "How do I know that it cost $20 for rent, for instance, for our sheet music department, and $24 for heat and light, and $520 for clerk hire ?"

"Because it actually did," I answered, and I proceeded to explain to him the basis of the figures before him. "It's a very easy matter to determine the total clerks' wages for any department for a year. It is merely the process of picking out the people who sell a certain line of goods and totaling their wages. It is just as simple to find the rent, the heat, and light for a department ; that is a process of dividing the total number of square feet in the store by the number devoted to this department, and charging the same proportion of the year's rent. The superintendence is a little more difficult, but that can also best be arrived at on the basis of space, as can also the general wear and tear of equipment.

"Administration and office expense are charged in proportion to the department's volume of sales."

And so I went through every expense account, showing exactly the basis on which the distribution was made.

Buried in the interesting details which I had opened up to him, the general manager failed to see the forest because of the trees.

"These figures are interesting and they will doubtless help the management of the business ; but how do they show what has been the matter with our profits ?"

"Right here," and I picked out five sheets from the pile. "You pushed two departments particularly hard this year, chiefly in order to overcome competition. You lost money on both these departments.

"You opened three new departments ; one was very successful ; the other two you lost money on. Now, why ?"

"You lost money on library tables and display counters because you were bucking against competition ; you sold on too close a margin, did a great deal of advertising, and hired special salesmen. Your sales expense plus your general expense more than consumed your gross profit.

"You lost on sheet music because not only is the margin comparatively small, but each sale is for but a small amount. Then the department takes up a good deal of room ; it requires a great display space ; you have a piano there on which purchasers try the latest popular airs. And your gross profit is, therefore, more than eaten up by your general expense in this department. The same applies to books."

Johnston sat silent, his chin resting on his hand. He was waiting for more.

"Now take the year's business ; subtract from your total expenses the expenses of three or four departments. The resultant profit would be larger than the actual profit you made last year, while the percentage of profit would show an even greater increase !

"I have shown you the cause. It carries with it the remedy. How that remedy should be applied is for you to say. Some of these departments you can doubtless drop ; others you must keep in order to hold certain business for other lines. In one or two of the departments you can make such changes that they will show the right margin of net profits."

The general manager rose abruptly and picked up the sheets. "There is more important work for me to do to-day," he said, "than sit at this desk. I am going home to my library to work this out."

"Mr. Norman," he said, his hand on my shoulder, "you have shown me the goal and the straight path. I have got to run to make it. The rest ought to be easy."

And it was.

Early Saturday Closing

An Agitation Started in Kingston—Views of the Drygoodsmen—Closing Hour Now is Ten O'clock.

A Kingston clergyman advocated from his pulpit that merchants of that city close earlier Saturday evenings than they do at present. The News took up the subject and sought the opinions of a number of retailers. Here are those obtained from several drygoodsmen :

"Edward Steacy, of Steacy & Steacy, was a dissenting voice. To the question : Are you in favor of the early closing on Saturday night ? Mr. Steacy replied emphatically : No, I am not. We close at six every evening and on Saturday nights at ten, sharp. This rule is rigidly enforced, and, I think, if every store in the city did likewise there would be fewer complaints. We have a large establishment, and take in enough money between eight and ten o'clock every Saturday night to pay seventy-five hands. You are at liberty to question the clerks if they are satisfied with their hours. This was done and unanimously they were perfectly satisfied."

"Mr. Shaw, of Newman & Shaw, said : Say that I am strongly in favor of it. It will benefit both merchants and employes. The groceries close at seven, though a few years ago the suggestion was pooh-poohed as impossible. Now it is universal and the nine o'clock movement could be just as well carried out. The majority of houses pay their clerks on Friday, which gives them ample time to get around before nine o'clock Saturday evening. If clerks stay in stores till nearly twelve o'clock you cannot expect them to be at church Sunday morning. It is a habit more than anything else, to shop late. We certainly would be glad to see early closing."

"George Mills (hats) was one of those in deepest sympathy with the scheme. There is no necessity of late shopping, said Mr. Mills, and if a bylaw were passed requiring the merchants to obey to the letter, it would be a move in the right direction. But for one to close and two to keep open, it would spoil the attempt. The strongest point is there must be unity from the beginning. Some of the stores keep open till twelve o'clock waiting for others to close. Let us all close at nine and both merchants and employes will be benefited."

"Say for me that I am heartily in favor of the early closing, said Mr. Laidlaw, but it must be with the distinct understanding that there will be a bylaw and one that will be enforced. I think every store should close at nine o'clock, not only on Saturdays, but on every night preceding a holiday, which often spoils the day of pleasure following it. With one exception, and that only on Christmas Eve, would I allow the stores to remain open. Householders do not shop on Saturday nights ; it is mainly maids who have been kept in till after eight, but a little thoughtfulness on the part of their employers would give them ample time to get around earlier. Friday markets would help wonderfully with the scheme."

"Mr. Waldron, who is one of the oldest dry goods merchants in Kingston, had this to say : I think that closing at five for the two warmest months of the year and at six every night, with the exception of Saturdays, when the hour is ten, is fair treatment to both customers and clerks. The hours are strictly adhered to and we treat our employes with every consideration. There are no complaints about the hours from the clerks ; they are satisfied with the present arrangement, and so am I."

Following is an editorial from the Kingston News on this subject :

"The question of earlier closing of the shops on Saturday night, brought to the attention of the public by Rev. Dr. McTavish in a sermon last Sunday, is one worthy of consideration. The early closing on other evenings is now generally approved, and where late hours now prevail most are desirous of shortening the time. On Saturday evening, however, nearly all cling to the old system of open shop till the night is far advanced. Yet it may be found that there is no imperative need for doing business later on Saturday night than on any other evening. Some employers pay their hands on Friday, and with a little more effort this number might be increased. In which case, it is as easy to order goods on Friday evening or early Saturday, and have them delivered early in the day, as to place the orders on Saturday evening. Moreover, there are few families where they are living so much a hand-to-mouth existence that they are dependent on the present week's income for Sunday's food.

"To close at, say, eight o'clock, on Saturday evening, would enable the merchants and their employes to get home in time to acquire a night's rest, and be thus better prepared to spend Sunday as a day of worship and rest, instead of now, in many cases, a day of rest mainly or entirely."

THE GRANBY MANUFACTURING COMPANY

ORIGINATORS OF COMBS THAT SELL

GRANBY, QUE.

FANCY GOODS AND NOTIONS

Fancy goods and notions comprise a great variety of articles. The range is as big as a merchant chooses to make it. Foremost come the goods of leather manufacture. A fine assortment of them can be shown to advantage for the Christmas trade.

Merchants are finding the sales of beaded bags, fancy and plain elastic belts, various varieties of bags, fancy boxes, plain, mock and fancy jewelry, infants' novelties, many lines of combs from brilliants to cut steel, and last, but not least, Japanese fancy goods, are very active. At present all progressive merchants in large city stores are paying close attention to these lines.

The gift trade is exceedingly big, and a merchant cannot afford to let it get away from him. Besides paying a fine profit in itself, it brings new customers to the store, and they will seldom go out without making some purchases from the general stock. Further, it does not require highly paid salespeople to look after this counter. The goods are displayed and a buyer can make a choice with very little assistance from the clerk. The latter, however, must know the lines thoroughly that she handles.

If a good variety of articles for the holiday season has never been in stock before, let a trial be made this year and watch the results.

Japanese Fancy Goods.

Lines selling best for the Christmas trade, in Japanese fancy goods, are tea and chocolate sets, also all kinds of fancy dishes. The tea and chocolate sets can be retailed from $3 to $10 per set. The fancy dishes can be had at retail from 15c. to $1.50 each piece. All of above articles mentioned net the merchant a big profit. In vases, fancy hand-painted effects are shown this season. These also net a large profit, being retailed at $1 to $5. They come in fancy floral patterns and Japanese figures.

Travelers now on the road are showing fancy baskets of every description, such as hand-painted paper lines, work baskets, baskets suitable for handkerchiefs and gloves. The range this season is one of the best ever shown to the trade. They are to be had in all sizes, and 3c. buys one of the smallest, which, when retailed at 5c. or 10c., brings a good profit, and also proves a good drawing card to the store, if mentioned when the notion department is being advertised in the local paper.

Antimony novelties, such as photo holders, ash trays, match boxes, ink stands, powder boxes, and various other articles of this description are also to the fore, and are enjoying a fair share of the Christmas trade.

Lacquer ware, shown in variously designed boxes, suitable for handkerchiefs, gloves, etc., is also active. Everything in this line is in demand by the retailer, and the articles make attractive gifts at reasonable prices.

The Comb Trade.

The comb trade at present is in good condition. A large variety of cut steel, jet, gold-trimmed, and, in fact, all lines of fancy set combs, are being shown. High-back lines have been asked for considerably. The demand for brilliants is still strong. Barettes of all descriptions are having an exceptionally heavy sale this Fall, with brilliants, plain, cut jets and cut-steel selling in the order mentioned, the cut steel and jet styles having preference in better grade goods. A new article in a plain barette style comes in both oval and straight shapes. The groundwork is of shell, inlaid with gray. It is fast coming to the front.

A line which is proving a steady seller is the patent holder comb. This new article is similar in appearance to the general run, but has a small bar which effectually prevents the comb being lost. This holder can be applied to any style. Combs, with monograms, in spite of the trouble of keeping stock up, are proving very active sellers. As the holiday trade draws near, they will improve in demand.

Sears, Roebuck Report

Gross Sales in Year Ended June 30, $53,285,792, and Surplus $3,238,502.

According to the annual report of Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, for the year ended June 30 last, the gross sales were $53,285,792, and net $50,722,839. The surplus for the year is $3,238,502, which is equal to 7 per cent. on the $10,000,000 preferred stock, and 8 per cent. on the $30,000,000 common.

The only means of comparison is with the results of the period ended Dec. 31 last, when the net sales were $37,943,472, and the surplus $2,868,061. The company was incorporated in its present form on June 16, 1906. The report compares as folows with the years ended Dec. 31, 1906, and Dec. 31, 1905:

	June 30, '07.	Dec.31, '06.	Dec. 31, '05.

Golfers

Sweaters, Golfers, Blouses, Etc.

These Lines in Steady Request Owing to the Increasing Favor of Outdoor Sports—Neat and Practical Garments in Demand.

Sweaters, golfers, blouses, etc., both for women's and men's wear, are having a steady sale. This is owing to the fact that the love of outdoor sports is increasing. Also to the fact that no garments are so comfortable for this use as those of knitted wool. These garments are little used for any other than outdoor wear, and, therefore, the merely fanciful effects have given place to the practical. Not that becomingness is not demanded, and good style and finish, but it is really the usefulness of the garment that sells it. Blouses are firmly established in favor, and, perhaps, sell the best of any of the ladies' knitted goods. Smart little Etons with a turn-back band collar and an elastic knit ribbing that makes it set snugly to the waist is another good selling garment. For the later season, when skating, and other mid-winter sports are indulged in, ladies sweaters, sweater coats, Norfolk jackets, etc., are sure to be wanted. Toques and tams to match will also be asked for. Another line that will come into prominence with the advent of cold weather is knit skirts. More interest is taken by the buying public in knitted scarfs and shoulder shawls. These come in honeycomb pattern and in ice-wool and silk.

Men's lines comprise sweaters for men and boys, sweater coats, cardigan jackets, also sweaters that open at the neck. This opening is lined with a contrasting color and can be buttoned up if desired.

Underwear

Retail Stocks Are Not Yet Broken Into—Acute Cotton Situation Affecting Cotton Underwear for Spring.

There is little of moment to report in the underwear section of the trade. Retailers all have stocks in readiness for the commencing of the Fall selling season. The weather, so far, scarcely favors sales, in this department, and just how large the season's requirements will be depends almost solely upon the kind of weather experienced during the next two months. Until retail stocks become somewhat broken into, repeats cannot come to hand, but should they do so in any considerable quantity, delivery difficulties will soon make themselves felt. Anxiety as to crop conditions, the circulation of pessimistic reports, and the action of the banks in curtailing credits have made buyers cautious. While this caution is the best guarantee of future prosperity, buyers must be reminded of the nature of the cotton situation. In all the more staple lines of cotton goods the price tendency is upwards, and in Canada, due to increasing population, and, in spite of all contrary predictions, to increasing prosperity, cosumption is ahead of production. In the States, and also in Europe, the situation is the same. Manufacturers are increasing their plants, but this is a work of time, and even when mills and machinery have been provided, there is still the difficulty in obtaining skilled labor. Raw cotton is also high in price, and the future promises little relief in this respect.

While manufacturers have made every possible effort to keep qualities up, and prices down, in the new lines of cotton underwear, many merchants will not look with much favor upon the result. There is a decided increase in prices right along the line, and there is also a decided reduction in qualities, particularly in popular priced lines. Fifty cent lines will suffer most, and though higher grades are not up to what we have considered hitherto as standard values, the differences here are less noticeable.

The Hosiery Situation

Fall Hosiery Shows the Advance in Prices—Tans for Fall Selling—Growing Interest in Fancy Lines.

Deliveries of Fall hosiery are now being made, and, judging from appearances, the 35c. line will continue to be the leading seller. Even at this, price values are not equal to last year. Cheap grades certainly look cheap, for it is in the lower lines that the big advances which have taken place show most clearly. The 35c. hose has been the leading popular priced seller for some time now, having taken to some extent the place that used to be held by the 25c. line. More than ever will this be the case this Fall, as both the appearance and wear of the lower lines are, generally speaking, decidedly poor. Standard makes that are marketed under well-known names show up to decided advantage, when compared with the general run of lines, as makers of these goods have used every effort to keep up their reputation for quality.

The interest in tan footwear still keeps up, and particularly in the larger centres there is going to be a big demand for tan hose. As long as fairly fine weather lasts, tans will be in demand.

Fall selling at retail has hardly commenced, and heads of departments are keeping trade going by bargain sales of odds and ends of summer stocks and broken lines. It should be noticed that, with the exception of extreme styles, the price-cutting falls heaviest upon black hose.

Women's shoe lines were never so dressy as they are this fall. Fancy colors and combination effects are very prominent. Shoes, with cloth tops to match the gown, and with tops of colored kid, and ooze calf, are now being shown by the leading stores. These fanciful fashions are sure to react upon the hosiery department. The increased interest in fancy hosiery, though it adds to the buyer's responsibilities, and also to the size of his stock, ought to add materially to the profits of his department. Goods of this class ought to carry a good profit, and ought to sell at good prices.

The staple trade will, of course, be done in black and tans. The fashion tendency is for embroidered effects and neat patterns in self and in subdued contrasts are the chief sellers.

IS A SLUMP IN HOSIERY COMING?

Despite the cheerful tone still prevailing in some of the Continental wool markets among both spinners and manufacturers—and this is especially the case at the French centres, Roubaix-Tourcoing, Mazamet and Havre—the week's confidential advices from Chemnitz received by a large London house are by no means so confident as they have been as to the near future of the prodigious hosiery trade of that district. Indeed, it is by some authorities considered that the boom is at an end, and as these gentlemen are certainly not likely to give the rein to pessimism in such a matter, the opinion is all the more worthy of attention. Prices asked in Chemnitz last week were contested energetically by buyers, and, in many instances, with success, and the fear of canceled orders cutting into returns that were otherwise assured well into next Spring, is making hosiery manufacturers put forward renewed efforts to keep to stipulated dates for delivery as well as to insure goods being up to sample—both points on which a good deal of complaint has been heard in London during the year. Such information is, of course, but the edge of a falling boom, and, so large are the still unexecuted orders in Chemnitz, that wholesale prices will probably be quite unaffected by the turn of things during the present season. It merely means that the indications are that the crest of the wave has been topped. If present tendencies continue, the results will be apparent in the wholesale market next spring, for it may be that the rather extensive orders for new machinery for Chemnitz have been "previous," in which case it is not out of the question that we shall see a glut of Chemnitz hosiery at very reduced prices on this side next year. The history of German made-up textile exports in the past shows that dumping often follows with extraordinary closeness on boom times, and, while we have no wish to strike an unnecessarily alarmist note, it will, perhaps, be well for the trade to be prepared for that to happen in the case of Chemnitz hosiery goods.—Draper's Record.

MERCHANTS BLAME THE BANKS.

We have heard a number of general merchants complain that farmers are not buying as freely as they should, and the banks are blamed for this condition of affairs. All general stores handle a good deal of produce. It was formerly the practice, with most of them, to pay for it in cash, and on certain days a considerable sum had to be on hand. The farmers received their money, and almost invariably spent it liberally. Some time ago the banks requested that produce payments be made by cheque, and, of course, this has been done. Now a farmer takes in his eggs, butter, etc., and gets a cheque for the full amount. At the bank he may want to convert it into currency, but is strongly urged to leave it on deposit. In the majority of instances he does so, and then, instead of looking round to see what goods he would like to have, and purchasing freely, he spends as little as possible. As his savings grow, he becomes more and more eager to augment them, and, consequently, is likely to cultivate economy.

The banks have adopted this policy all through the country as a means of increasing deposits. One result is that while few farmers had bank accounts some years ago, there are not many who haven't at the present time. General prosperity is benefitted, and, therefore, the condition must be accepted as a good one.

The feature of the situation with which The Review finds fault is that farmers have comfortable sums in the banks drawing interest, and, at the same time, they expect merchants to sell them goods on long credit. It is this that has given the movement toward cash system such impetus.

PESSIMISM WHOLLY UNWARRANTED.

The good old world is made up of all sorts of people, and, perhaps, it is right and proper that pessimists should form a certain percentage of the whole. They undoubtedly have their uses, though there are times when the rest of us—The Review is naturally optimistic—fail to see where they fit into the superstructure of Canada's destiny. They are not the men who are making this country great, but we freely acknowledge the fact that their influence often exerts itself in spurring us to closer study, and more thorough appreciation, of our true position than might otherwise be the case.

The crop prospect always gives the pessimist a splendid opportunity to swing himself, and there are some people—mainly those panicky brothers who don't really know whether to be optimistic or otherwise—upon whom his "blue-ruin" observations have an effect. The strong, thinking man, whose arteries pulsate with the good red blood of hope and ambition, has a broader outlook, and he sizes up the situation in just the way that we trust every dry goods merchant in Canada has done in the present instance.

The alarming statement was made a short time ago, by one in a position to know better, that the value of the Ontario crop would be one-third less than last year, entailing a loss to the farmers of this Province of $80,000,000, and reducing their purchasing power by that amount. The man who expressed himself publicly in this way forgot that while the crop might be one-third less in volume prices would be a great deal higher.

Our Winnipeg editor writes very favorably of conditions in the West. As in the East, difference in price wil go a long way toward making up for shortage in the yield. It is likely that much more grain will be shipped before January 1 than in any previous year. The railways are preparing to move it quickly, and as the farmers need the money, they will sell as soon as possible.

Retailers, on the whole, have purchased liberally for Fall and Winter, and have shown confidence in the Spring and Summer, 1908. Their trade in Fall lines is opening up satisfactorily. Wholesalers, looking still farther ahead, feel equally optimistic.

The scarcity of money certainly has an influence on the situation, and we repeat our advice of last month, that merchants avoid the danger of over-expansion, and operate, so far as possible, within the limits of their own capital. Credit men have more confidence in the retailers who are reasonably cautious than in those who are strenuously endeavoring to extend their responsibilities.

Altogether, there is every reason why drygoodsmen, and Canadians generally, should look upon present conditions, and into the future, with a strong feeling of confidence.

START CHRISTMAS SELLING EARLIER.

The Christmas season tries the facilities of most stores very severely, and the great majority of merchants feel that if they could extend the holiday rush over a little longer period they would do a good deal larger business, and handle it with much more satisfaction to their customers, and, consequently, to themselves. It can be done. In most cases active selling does not commence until the first week in December, or later, and the congestion of trade that follows is well known to everyone. Is there any good reason why you could not attract brisk buying the last week in November? Numbers of other retailers have done so, and you can, too. The Christmas spirit will have permeated the atmosphere by that time, and it rests with you to stir it up. Advertising and display are the chief mediums through which this may be accomplished. Devote your newspaper space to Christmas goods, and emphasize the advantage of buying early, when selections can be made more comfortably and while assortments are unbroken. Make the windows and interior co-operate with the ads. If you can evolve some idea to interest the children in your store it will help very materially.

It is not too early to think of the Christmas trade. Lay your plans now and resolve that your facilities shall be much better this year than ever before.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

R. L. Borden, leader of the Opposition in the Dominion House, has selected rural mail delivery as one of the planks of his platform. It looks very nice, everyone will admit, but beyond the ornamental quality its usefulness is nil. The delivery of postal matter through the rural districts would be a splendid thing, but the people of Canada need not expect the convenience of such a service for a few years yet. The scheme is not practicable, and we believe that Mr. Borden must know it. At any rate, he has never attempted to go into details regarding the probable cost, and the method of operation. He simply points to last year's surplus of $1,000,000, in the Post Office Department, and promises that if he were at the head of the Government it would be spent in the manner mentioned above.

Suppose Mr. Borden was Premier of Canada, and had that million dollars, how would he dispose of it to the best advantage? Certainly not in establishing rural mail delivery. Our postal facilities require improvement far nearer the foundation of the system than that. In 1906 there were 347 post offices opened, the greater number in the West. From this new country come a multitude of complaints regarding the inefficiency of the mail service. The surplus, and a good deal more along with it, should be spent in remedying the present unsatisfactory conditions there. The first step in this direction must take the form of better remuneration to postmasters. That is where the fault lies. These men are generally merchants as well and it cannot be expected that they will give the proper amount of time and attention to the work if they do not receive proper salaries for doing so. The existing state of affairs cannot be charged to the railway companies; they are giving good service. The blame belongs to the Post Office Department alone, and a portion of that million dollars would go a long way toward setting matters right.

The catalogue houses will exert themselves in support of rural mail delivery, just as they are doing with respect to extension of the parcels post service. Both may come in time, but not while present conditions prevail in the Canadian retailing system.

Across the line rural mail delivery has been operated in several States. For a long while the expense of maintaining it was very heavy, and it is only now that a few sections have attained a position where they do not show a big deficit. Then the service has always been used for the production of political capital by the party in power.

CLAIMS FOR SHORTAGE

When an order is filled in manufactory or wholesale house the goods are checked over very carefully to see that nothing is missing. The ensemble often includes a wide variety of materials and articles, and occasional errors are, perhaps, excusable. However, we have been told of instances where retailers claimed shortage, and while they waxed indignant at the request of the wholesaler that another search be made, the goods reposed snugly in the bottom of packing cases that had been thrown into their cellars. Not long ago a traveler for one of the prominent wholesale houses was informed by a customer that a bolt of a certain material which he ordered had not been received. Because at first mention of the matter another bolt was not sent along, without question, the retailer induced himself to believe that the house doubted his word, and he was, in consequence, pretty hot under the collar. He saw the goods unpacked himself and knew positively just what was there and what was not. The traveler suggested that they both go and take a look at the case in which the missing bolt was supposed to have come. The merchant ridiculed the idea, and it was not until the next day that he agreed to go into the cellar, and then only because the traveler said he might like to purchase some packing cases for his firm. To get at once to the point, the goods were found, for they had never been taken out of the case.

Instances of this kind may be rather unusual, but that they do occur at all is sufficient warrant for our calling attention to them. As goods are removed the paper with which packing cases are lined falls in, and a little carelessness is liable to result in some article being overlooked, with a consequent claim for shortage.

The Canadian Millinery Review

The early part of the month was of too summer-like a nature to foster trade in the millinery department. The retail trade has been generally occupied with planning and conducting openings. Though these have been most successful, and well attended, the results, so far as sales go, have not been very great. This, however, is not unexpected, as customers come to "look" rather than to buy at these functions. The first touch of Autumn coolness found customers responsive, and should the weather keep seasonable, the millinery department will be all activity, and repeat orders will grow in size and volume.

The importing houses are well satisfied with the manner in which the season has opened up. Advance buying, and buying at the time of the openings was large, the trade having philosophically accepted the prevailing high prices. Perhaps one reason for this is because the materials shown are rich and handsome, and look to be worth the money. It is, however, a certainty that milliners will have to raise their prices this Fall.

Later Novelties in Fall Shapes

Fashion Still Favoring Large Shapes—The Tendency for Straighter Brims and Higher Crowns.

Already changes are making themselves felt. The most important of these is the receding vogue of mushroom shapes. The brim still droops somewhat, but does not curl in mushroom fashion. This change is not unexpected, as the mushroom shape had become so universally popular. In the better trade its day is about over, but in the popular end this shape will, most probably, last out the early part of the season.

Straighter brims and higher crowns characterize the new models. Among novel styles those with the brim turned up sharply on the left side promise to be good. In many of the new shapes the left side is decidedly wider than the right. Shapes having slightly drooping brims, wider at the sides than at the front or back, promise to be well worn, as they are very becoming. Models with irregular brims are also beginning to be shown. The baloon crown is prominent on many of the new models. There is no change in the fashionable tendency for large hats, and large shapes will undoubtedly be much worn this season. For street and suit hats some medium shapes are seen, but there is nothing in the present style that comes anywhere near the toque shapes, so much liked by Canadian women for Winter wear.

Fine French felts fur felts, sheared beavers, etc., are very much in evidence, but the made hat, covered with velvet, taffeta, satin or moire, is well shown. These hats are plainly covered, as to the brim, but often have shirred mob or draped crowns. Sometimes crown and brim are of the one material, and sometimes the brim will be covered with the one, and the crown will be of another fabric. Velvet bindings are freely used, and a satin lining is often added. Lining of white or pale colored satin is a new Paris idea.

Ribbons

An Increasing Use Made of Ribbons as the Season Advances—Soft Draping Plain Ribbons and Many Fancies in Big Demand—Prices Advancing.

The position of ribbons as a millinery trimming has strengthened since the season opened, and a greater variety is now being used. Ribbons that will drape into soft folds are best liked, particularly in plains. Ribbons of this class, massed in large loops, against the high crowns, often with pins or a buckle, are the only trimming used, and take the place of flowers or feathers.

Flowers, mixed with folds, and folded loops of ribbon, are also used; indeed, ribbon is put on with a lavish hand this Fall. Fancy ribbons—Dresdens, warp prints, and others—are very much in evidence. Stripes are a late novelty. A new ribbon of this class has a shaded centre, with a bold, contrasting, striped edge. Another novelty is the striped ground with large coin spots of contracting stripe or check.

Ottoman, faille and moire ribbons are coming into use, and velvet ribbons are freely employed.

Feathers and Flowers

Wing and Plume Effects for the Early Trade—Ostrich and Flowers to Lead Later.

The new millinery for early Fall shows the extreme use of feathers. Fluffy fancy effects, in pom-poms cockades, fountain mountings, etc., are all in high favor. No one feather or spray is enough to trim a hat; they are used in handfuls, as it were, for one single feather would be lost on the wide brims and expansive crowns. Feathers, and, indeed, all other trimmings, are massed upon the crown of the new hats, always concealing the front and sides, and very frequently covering the whole crown. Often there is little or no trimming at the back, but trimmings are piled high in front. Medium and large sized wings in beautiful color blendings, and markings are also much in evidence. These wings are soft, smooth and pliable, and can be bent and draped as the milliner's taste suggests.

Ostrich plumes are more than holding their own. Just at the present time many fanciful forms are being used, but later the call will be for rich, handsome, medium effects, in plumes, demi-plumes and tips. Boa effects, in coque, marabout and down, are included in novelty trimmings.

Flowers are making a strenuous bid for more prominence, and it looks as though they would be successful later on. The tendency is for large blooms, made of delicate, silken, and heavy velvet petals, dyed, tinted and shaded, in all the rich, soft colorings, so fashionable this season. The combinations and colorings are hardly describable. Soft yellows, shade into pinkish tans and greens. Copper and mahogany shades fade away into light dull reds, pinks merge into browns, and cerise and pink shade into dull purple, while all seem overcast with a greyish tint. The colorings are extremely beautiful, and are doing much to win a high place for flowers this winter. More foliage is seen than for some time past, and velvet leaves vie with those of a wax-like appearance. Roses are, as usual, easily the first flower. Morning glories, of sizes larger than natural, are much used. Dahlias, asters, clematis, orchids, large pansies, and other unusual blooms are all used for trimming. Purple violets, of a large size, are also shown, and the great vogue of purple ought to help their sale.

The Position of Colors

Purple Leading—Big Sale of Brown—Blue Gaining Strength—Red Series Also Strong, Particularly Garnet.

The color situation is interesting. Purple is the most talked of and most prominent color, though it is not selling the best. Most milliners think that its importance will lessen as the season advances, but it certainly is the leading color at the present time. The many shades of brown, and browns in combination, with other colors, are doing extremely well, the golden tan shades being particularly good. Blues—that is odd shades, such as the tapestry colors, old blues, nattier, etc.—are making a great gain. Navy is little seen, which is surprising, in a season when it is so much worn as a dress color. A brown, or a leather colored hat generally accompanies a navy suit nowadays. Atlantic blue, and other greenish or peacock shades, are making a gain in the better trade.

Black hats, of silk or moire, trimmed with vivid Empire and emerald green feathers, and ribbon, are now being worn. All the red shades are popular, and garnet is gaining ground.

When colder weather arrives, the fondness for white hats, and hats of a pale color, trimmed with lace, feathers, tulle and fur, promises to revive. Hats of tulle and fur are now beginning to be shown, a tulle crown and a brim of fur, or a fur crown and brim of lace and tulle being the fashion. Rarely is the whole hat of fur. Long-haired furs, like white fox, black lynx, etc., are the novelty in this line. A white fox crown and lace brim form an extra attractive fashion. Velvet ribbons are much used on fur hats. White hats often show touches of tinsel—silver and gold particularly—and are trimmed with tulle and feathers, or velvet and flowers. The all black hat, and the black and white hat, are in high favor.

More Ornaments Used

Ornaments to Be a Bigger Factor Than for Many Seasons Past—Pins Most Seen, but Buckles and Bands Are Worn.

The big pins, so much in evidence last Summer, are more than ever a factor in Winter millinery. Large ball pins are easily the first favorites, but pear-shaped pins, and other large-headed styles, are also used. A large number of substances are pressed into service for the heads of these pins and metal, shell, agate and other stones, celluloid, chenille, etc., are all favored materials. These pins seem to have paved the way for other ornaments, and the demand for buckles, bands, etc., is larger than it has been for years. Steel, rhinestone and jets are about the best sellers. Buckles are, naturally, large in size, and Parisian milliners are reported to be using them very freely.

DEBENHAM'S STYLE REPORTS.

Following is one of the latest of the fashion reports which Debenhams (Canada) Limited have received from their Paris house: "The shapes in millinery are large blocked shapes in velvet, also glace, silks; plenty of ostrich and other feather mounts. Wings, in plain and ombre shades, large bows, in velvet and taffeta. Flowers are not much to the fore at present. There are, however, some roses in silk and velvet, and the tip in that flower as millinery trimming will come along shortly. The leading colors are: Violet, mole, mordore, emerald, and vieux blue.

"In the way of costumes, I have not been struck by any very important change in the making-up or the material used, but the new colors are very pretty. The tailor-made note dominates, and, for such, plain cloth is as popular as ever, trimmed with braids. For evening wear there is mousseline, and any amount of tulles, and nets, also crepe-de-chine and cachemire de soie, trimmed with embroideries and laces. Fancy printed gauzes are to the fore in the way of more elaborate gowns, and here the design is largely confined to the bottom of the skirt, giving either a bordered or panel effect. The leading colors are very pretty and are as follows: Atlantic, Mexican, Corfu, Begonia, Apollo, Etna, Cormorant, Jasper, Chicory green, Iris. There is also a good deal of smoke-grey and mole."

NEW YORK MODE

The Reign of Luxury—A Picturesque Period that Spells Profit to the Trade.

The first and last impression one has of the new fashions is not how handsome, how beautiful, or how ugly, but—how expensive! It is positively appalling to contemplate the quantity and quality of materials necessary to make up one's wardrobe. The most costly fabrics are used with a lavishness suggestive of unlimited incomes, nor is this lavishness confined solely to goods manufactured expressly for the highest trade. In a lesser degree, of course, it characterizes the entire world of dress. Dresses, wraps and hats demand quantities of material, for one can hardly "overtrim," judging from the present standards.

All this lavishness, this almost wanton use of ornamentation, is excellent for trade, if bad for the individual. The woman who expects not only to be dressed in the fashion, but to even follow it at a respectful distance, must dig deep into her purse, for she must purchase handsome materials and much more of them than she usually finds necessary. Let the trade rejoice and prepare for the harvest, for where formerly twelve yards, or maybe fifteen yards of goods, were sufficient for a dress, how far is a mere fifteen yards going to go in making a seventeen-gore skirt? And that skirt is the very newest model. As the entire aim and object of the present day mode is toward the picturesque and luxurious, how can that effect be obtained if the best fabrics are not used, and used without stint? It must be admitted that many of the newest fads are of doubtful beauty. It would be all very well if every woman were a Venus, for, without question, the sweeping feathers, long flowing draperies and conspicuous styles in general were never designed to show off to advantage the ordinary charms of the average woman. Be that as it may, Dame Fashion has decreed that women must be picturesque. So, picturesque they must be, in many instances, at the sacrifice of comfort and common sense.

Much dissatisfaction has been expressed over the lack of variety, especially in millinery shapes, which have been displayed. The mushroom and bell shapes appear, almost to the exclusion of everything else, and really the most important feature is not so much shape as size, for the larger the hat the greater its favor. Nothing appears too extreme, and, consequently, to many women the new hats are extremely trying. As they continue to be worn back off the face, showing a great deal of the coiffure, and as the back and side brims almost invariably drop, the hair has to be built out to almost a ludicrous degree by means of pads, puffs and curls. It must be admitted that with such elaborate head-dressing, and such enormous and heavily laden hats, that the effect is often rather top-heavy, so that since large hats and corresponding coiffures are the rage, of necessity, skirts have had to undergo a change to preserve an effect of balance.

Possibly, for this reason, too, capes have made their reappearance. The three small shoulder capes of the Directoire period are very much in evidence, as are also the long panel effects of the same period. Skirts of all kinds are trimmed in some way or another. The short walking skirt has its bias folds, or bands, and the dressy skirt its tucks, bands or encrustations of lace or motifs of lace, embroidery or elaborate ribbon effects. And skirts of every variety may be subjected to the simplest or most intricate braided effects.

Braids are stronger at the time of writing than they have been for years. Tailor-mades are heavily braided, as are also the handsomest evening coats. Not a few of the cutaway coats are outlined with a silk braid in self or contrasting color, as well as elaborately appliqued with narrower braid. Look to the braid department; it ought to be a profitable one this season, for Fashion demands braids, and hardly a suit is minus this form of trimming.

Now, as to materials, one can almost say it matters little what they are, as long as they are striped. Stripes hold absolutely first place for the tailor-made and, in diaphanous materials, for evening wear. One of the handsomest novelties of the season is a chiffon cloth with a self-colored velvet stripe. Chiffon and velvet is not a new combination, as last season not a few chiffon gowns were shown with wide bands of velvet finishing the skirt. This rather unique fashion is again in vogue. Sheer fabrics are most in evidence for elaborate frocks, although postillion coats of heavy velvets and brocades are frequent accessories. The prevailing mode demands materials which drape gracefully, so that lightweight materials have the preference. Too much stress can hardly be laid upon the pre-eminence of stripes. They are to be reckoned with in all materials and colors.

Coats are long, and semi-fitted or short-waisted in effect, many being shapeless garments almost baggy in effect. The sleeves have the same undefinite outlines and are still finished just below the elbow. High, standing collars are rivaling the usual turned-back coat collar. Innumerable buttons are used as trimming, this fad being also borrowed from the Directoire period. As to color, blue probably is in the lead; the goblin and Copenhagen shades being very strong. Purple is at present freely displayed, but is rather regarded more as a fad than a fashion. The wine shades are strong, and brown, in spite of its long reign, is holding its own. Black is most distinguished and elegant of all, and, undoubtedly, will be in higher favor, especially for reception, theatre and dinner gowns, as well as for millinery.

One of the millinery fads worthy of mention is the velvet and silk morning glory. This varigated flower will be a strong rival to the rose, which, of course, is far from being vanquished from the field. Morning glories lend themselves gracefully for crown decoration. They are allowed to trail over the entire hat, and are extremely effective, as they are made in exquisite color combinations, of purples, blues and reds. Mention has already been made of the prominence of silk hats and facings. Moire and corded silk have the preference. Velvet facings in a darker tone are effective.

The sweeping plume dear to the feminine heart, has to share its favor with the small feathers. As many as twenty ostrich tips are used on some models, tips, as a matter of fact, being newer than plumes, and, therefore, more in favor. Willow effects are in great demand. Huge feather pom-poms and fancy feather effects fashioned to cover the entire crown are much in vogue. These are appropriately called "Fountain effects," and are a novelty of the season. All fluffy effects are good, there being a great lack of anything suggesting severity. When wings are used, as, of course, they are on the tailored hats, they are so extremely large and sweeping in effect, and are so combined with softening knots of ribbon or velvet, that there is nothing of stiffness about them, and, like feathers, they are mounted to fall backward in an elongated, graceful side line. The backward droop is characteristic of the season.

Felt hats are enriched by velvet or silk facings. Fur will again be conspicuous in millinery, and used principally as a crown covering. A fad of the hour is the "hat boa" of coque or marabout, which encircles the crown and gives a very soft effect. These have the added attraction of being inexpensive. Yet, with countless feathers, flowers, ornaments, laces and furs, no hat is really complete without innumerable yards of wide and very pliable ribbon, and no dress is really complete without ribbon as a part, and a most important part, of its design. There is absolutely no limit to the lavishness of the present fashions.

One of the largest models shown this season is the subject of the first illustration. It is in every sense of the word a picture hat, being developed in heavy black lace, with silk applique and black velvet. There are three French tips used, a buckle of cut steel and jet, and streamers of wide ribbon. The brim measures nearly ten inches at the sides, five in the front and seven in the back The crown is rather more extreme in height than is usual, even at this time of high and dominating crowns. However, it is only in its extreme size that this model is unusual. Modified as to size, it is a model sure to find favor with high-grade trade.

The second illustration shows another extremely large hat. The materials used are golden brown, figured net, satin and mink, for the body of the hat, and ostrich and lace for its decoration. The knife-pleated lace rosette is, by the way, one of the features of the season. It appears on evening hats, and also on fur creations, the rather ultra-combination of fur and lace being in evidence on all sides. Shirred net forms, practically, the entire brim, a binding of satin finishing the edge. The mushroom tendency is prominent, and the crown, extremely large, is covered entirely with mink. Four tips are used. This model very ably illustrates the lavish display of handsome materials Fashion now demands.

A simpler hat is the subject of the third illustration. It is a charmingly girlish suit hat of golden brown felt with crown of goblin blue ribbon. There is no other trimming used. The ribbon is one of the novelties of the season, being a soft messaline, with a Persian edge.

NELLIE GUNN McCLELLAND.

"Henry, dear," said Mrs. Newbride to her husband the other morning, "I wish, if it won't be too much trouble, dear, that you'd bring me home a yard of orange ribbon this evening.

"I don't want it so very wide or so very narrow, something between an inch and an inch and a half, or at most an inch and three-quarters, will be about right.

"Be sure and get a pretty shade of orange, dear, and I'd prefer it with one side satin and the other gros-grain, although all satin or all gros-grain will do ; but I think you can easily get the other if you look about a little, and be sure, dear, not to get picquet-edged ribbon, but one with just a plain corded edge, and don't get a remnant, and don't get any shade but orange; not a real vivid orange, either, but a piece that will look well with pale green, and don't pay too much for it, and don't get red, or blue, or pink, or green by mistake. You won't forget, will you, dear? I must have the ribbon to-night."

Was it any wonder that when the dazed Henry came home he brought three yards of sky-blue watered ribbon, or that, when his wife saw it, she sank into a chair and gasped out :

"Why—Henry—Newbride !"

When the old lady put her head out of the window and inquired of the young railway porter what the train was stopping for, the young man thought he would have a little fun at the old lady's expense.

"Engine was out late last night, ma'am," he remarked, with a smile, "so she's got a thirst on her this morning ; they're giving her a drop o' water."

"Ah ! it's water," said the old lady.

"If you'll wait a minute, ma'am," he grinned, "I'll enquire whether they're givin' her port wine."

"Never mind," came the answer, "don't you trouble, young man. I thought perhaps, by the way we've been getting along, she was run on sloe gin !"

Paris Fashions

By A. E. DACAM, for "Dry Goods Review."

The new Winter Cloaks and Mantles—Some Models Described—Leading Millinery Styles—Other Features of the Mode.

The new Winter cloaks and mantles are, perhaps, among the most interesting features of the changing styles, although the late Summer models led up to, and, to some extent, prepared us for, the present styles. The materials employed are, for the most part, plain cloths, velvet (both the chiffon and coteles), and for more serviceable wear, mixed damiers and tweeds. The plain cloths adapt themselves particularly well to the new and elaborate trimmings, which comprise bands of fur, heavy embroideries and soutaches, laces and velvets.

A striking model is carried out in grey cloth, three-quarter length, and just falling to the figure, without being tight-fitting; from under the seam reaching from shoulder to waist, falls the long, pointed sleeve, reaching almost to the hem of the cloak. This is carried out in velvet, a shade darker than the grey cloth, edged with a band of zibeleine and lined grey satin. The seam that joins the sleeve and cloak is hidden under a band of the same zibeline and headed by an embroidery of grey silk galon, finished at the waist with bunches of silk glands. The flat collar, which left a small, V-shaped opening in front, is made of grey velvet, with a narrow heading of grey satin.

Another model, carried out in dark green cloth, is much longer behind than in front, where it is brought up to form an inverted "V" opening. This garment is made very full at the back, where it falls in folds from the centre of the pointed yoke. Across the top of the sleeve is a wide band of fur, the two ends of which are brought down each side of the sleeve till they meet, just below the waist line, under a bunch of silk glands and tassels. The long sleeve is carried out in the green cloth, heavily embossed with green and black velvet, with a narrow fur edging for collar, which also leaves a V-shaped opening in front. Stitched V-shaped bands are carried across the front, being fastened onto the fur bands at each side under large silk glands.

The model sketched, No. 1, is carried out in a blue nattier cloth with revers and sleeves of black velvet, heavily embroidered in blue and gold. This garment is cut with the new draped effect falling over the sleeves The fur bands are carried out in black fox, while black silk glands and tassels fall from the front. The hat is of black velvet with a shaded green faille drapery carried through a strass buckle and a bunch of four black ostrich tips shaded off to green. The lining to the rather narrow cloche brim is of white satin.

Many cloaks are made without sleeves, or, rather, it would be more correct to say, without an armhole. The garment being cut so deep from the shoulder that it falls over the arm and forms a cape sleeve. Another style consists in having a perfectly straight piece of material with an opening in the centre for the head to pass through. This, when the two edges are fastened together, from under the arm downwards, form a vague sleeve of the short Japanese style. Then, with an opening cut down the front, that is trimmed with two bands of filet lace, ornamented by means of a ladder-like arrangement of glands, and fastened at the bust with the same straps that are used under the arm, the garment is complete This style can be varied with considerabfe success by having a skirt made to it. The upper part can then be cut very wide across the shoulders, forming a much longer sleeve and tapering off to the back and front, where it can be left square or brought to a point. This is stitched down to the skirt part from the bottom up to where the loose folds form the sleeve.

I must mention a very handsome evening cloak, carried out in silver grey taffeta, embroidered with large bunches of roses in grey silk of a deeper and paler shade than the teffeta. The half-length Japanese sleeve is very wide and finished off with a deep folded band of the taffeta. The cloak itself is short (the front being about four inches longer than the back), but it is lengthened by means of a 12-inch deep lattice work of grey silk galon, which, again, is finished with long tassels of the same silk ; the back ones being longer than front, so that the length is now even. A turn-down collar of white cloth is ornamented with silver beads and edged with a band of the teffeta.

We have heard much talk lately of double and tunic skirts, and there now seems every chance of their becoming popular. This style is well illustrated in sketch II., which is carried out in a plain cloth of the violet eveque shade so much in use for the moment. The draped arm hole and border of upper skirt are edged with mink and a narrow band of the same fur is carried around the yoke The long, tight-fitting sleeves, underskirt and yoke, are carried out in the same cloth, handsomely soutached with black velvet and gold. The hat worn with this costume is of black velvet, the brim lined with mauve satin and ornamented with six large ostrich tips.

Another smart costume of the double skirt style is a green and grey pekine, the green stripe being of velvet. The cut is simplicity itself, having a round, tailor-made skirt and short, tight-fitting jacket, cut low round the neck and meeting at the waist, showing a white lingerie vest and lace jabot. The long, tight-fitting sleeve, which has only the slightest fullness on the shoulder, and a shield-like empiecement under the armhole, reaching about half way to the waist, are carried out in green velvet, as is also the underskirt, which shows for about eight inches all round. These empiecements underneath, but not round, the armhole, are a novelty in the way of trimming which are likely to be much in vogue. It is of good effect in light materials, with the sleeve and empiecement in lace.

Sleeves, as yet, are very varied, but the long, tight fitting style will probably predominate later on in the season. The Japanese sleeve is receiving a certain amount of attention still. It is sometimes continued in an undersleeve, full at the elbow and gradually tightening towards the waist; or again. the sleeve itself, instead of terminating in a wide band at the elbow, is continued to the wrist, gradually decreasing in size. Some of the lace and silk sleeves, while still fitting closely to the arm, are tucked, pleated or gathered, from top to bottom.

Very large hats will still be worn this Winter, but they differ from the Summer shapes in that the crowns are much higher. These latter are being made much higher, and both round and conique. Another distinction is the manner in which the trimming is arranged. Now the entire crown is being covered with flowers, wings or feathers, as the case may be, while the Summer hats were arranged with the trimming in front only. A few large shapes are being worn with practically no trimming at all, as in the case of a black velvet Rembrandt, which is lined with white velvet, the only decoration being two large tips, standing almost upright, just to the left side of the front of the high crown.

This hat is carried out in all varieties of Winter blooms, some of the neater kinds being arranged evenly and headed by a garland of their leaves.

Sketch IV. is quite new and of a style likely to be much worn. This particular model is carried out in a nattier blue felt, lined with white satin, which is slightly gathered. One large blue nattier, shaded to mauve, feather is fastened at the back of the crown and falls over the brim. The latest seaside hats, made of printed taffetas and cretonnes, have their sequel in the felts with printed pompadour bouquets on them. This, when carried out in the large shapes, is very effective. For a useful, everyday hat, the Panama-shaped felts, simply trimmed with a scarf and bow, will be much worn. Some milliners are employing wings instead of the bow. Fur will be much employed for trimming, both as bands and edging to ribbons. Grebe also is being much spoken of.

AFTER THE SHUTTERS ARE UP

His Wife: "Have you had a bad day, dear?"

The Financier: "Yes, I lost over $250,000. And the worst of it is that nearly $100 of that was my own money!"

* * *

"Now, Charlie, you must be a very good boy. You have a nice new brother. Aren't you pleased?"

"Oh, I don't know. It's always the way; just as I'm getting on in the world, competition begins."

"John," said the woman with nine chapeaux, "I got another new hat to-day."

"My dear!" expostulated her husband. "That is the last straw."

"I know it," she said; "just from Paris."

Friend: "I am afraid your husband has a very bad cold; he's continually sneezing. It's quite painful to hear him. Why don't you ask a doctor to see him?"

Matron: "Well, I'm waiting just a few days because it amuses baby so to see his father sneeze."

Employer: "Said he wouldn't pay the bill, did he?"

Collector: "No, sir, he didn't say so- he sort of hinted; at least, when I'd picked myself out of the umbrella-stand, that's how I understood him, sir."

Husband: "Another new dress! Where do you suppose I shall get the money from to pay for it?"

Wife: "You must excuse me. I didn't marry you to give you financial advice."

Mr. Bacon, the proprietor of the "provision stores" at Mudville-on-the-Ooze, is a man of by no means brilliant intellect, and the majority of most of his correspondence is rather a puzzle to him.

But one morning he receive a letter which had an alarming effect on him, so that after he had torn six handfuls of hair out of his head in his endeavors to understand it, his wife snatched it from him and read it herself.

This is how it ran:

"Dere sur, will you let my little boy Billy 'ave six loaves and a pund of cheaze on trust, as me 'usband is out of wurk, and will yer rap the cheaze in a bit of the situations vacant advertisements of a newspaper, and tie the bread in lump of your butter muslin, 'cos if the werst comes to the werst and the old man don't find a job 'e'll 'ave to borrer your pair of steps and a pail and go out winder cleanin'?"

Maud (before the laughing hyena's cage): "How provoking! Here we've been twenty minutes, and the hyena hasn't laughed once."

Ella: "Strange, and he's been eying your new Fall hat, too."

Jones had just trod on the toe of an old gentleman while getting aboard the tramcar.

"I beg your pardon," he said.

"Hey? Speak louder; I'm a trifle deaf."

"I beg your pardon," repeated Jones.

"H'm! Peggy starving? Well, I'm sorry. Who's Peggy?"

Jones was red in the face now.

"You misunderstand, sir!" he shouted.

"Hey?"

"You misunderstood!"

"Miss Underwood, is she? Peggy, who is starving, is Miss Underwood. Well?"

"I didn't say anything about Miss Underwood!" screamed Jones. "I begged your pardon, and you misunderstood!"

"Oh, now I see!" said the old man, sympathetically. "It is your Aunt Peggy who is starving Miss Underwood. Well, why don't you report the case to the police?"

"Do you give gas here?" asked a wild-looking man who rushed into a dentist's.

"We do," replied the dentist.

"Does it put a fellow to sleep?"

"It does."

"Sound asleep, so you can't wake him up?"

"Yes."

"You could break his jaw or black his eye and he wouldn't feel it?"

"He would know nothing about it."

"How long does he sleep?"

"The physical insensibility produced by inhaling gas lasts a minute, or probably a little less."

"I expect that's long enough. Got it all ready for a fellow to take?"

"Yes. Take a seat in this chair and show me your tooth."

"Tooth nothing!" said the excited caller, beginning rapidly to remove his coat and vest. "I want you to pull a porous plaster off my back."

"Are these umbrellas all right, young man?" asked the customer.

"They are if you know enough to go in when it rains," replied the honest clerk.

ITEMS FROM ALL CANADA.

ONTARIO.

The employes of the Preston Woolen Mills held a picnic at Victoria Park, Berlin.

Caudwell Bros., Brantford, are enlarging their store by building a new upper storey.

J. and W. McMillan, formerly of Collingwood, will open a general store in Listowel.

The Mason Clothing Co., of Bowmanville, held a formal opening of their new store.

A five-storey building will be erected to replace the old Chrystal Hall, which collapsed at London in July.

Madden Bros., men's furnishers and tailors, St. Thomas, have had a fine, new front put in their store.

Harold N. Richardson and James G. Potts have bought out the men's wear business of Weart Bros., Vancouver.

Thos. Borbridge, formerly proprietor of a dry goods and tailoring business in Ottawa, died in that city recently.

The Ellis Manufacturing Co., Hamilton, are thinking of starting work in the near future on a new and much larger mill.

The new store of Ogilvie, Lochead & Co., Brantford, will have a floor space of 17,000 square feet. The improvements are costing $1),000.

Fire broke out in the Eagle Knitting Co.'s factory, Hamilton. It was extinguished quickly, but not before considerable damage was done by water.

The Universal Skirt Company, Ottawa, has assigned; liabilities between $25,000 and $30,000 ; assets, consisting of stock, machinery and standing accounts, $45,000.

The Brunswick hotel property, Ottawa, has been purchased by the Murphy-Gamble Company, who will pull down the building and erect a seven-storey dry goods store.

Thomas Mulcahy, Limited, Orillia, are making extensive alterations in their premises. Another store will be taken in, and forty-foot addition built to the rear. Dry goods will be stock, and the firm will then carry general lines.

Thomas Gilbard died at Cobourg, in his 82nd year. He retired some thirty years ago from the dry goods and clothing business. Some time ago he gave $16,000 toward the erection of a new consolidated public school. He also built a chapel for the Cobourg cemetery.

John Munro, of Navinshire, Scotland, has secured a position with John Catto & Co., Toronto. Mr. Munro is a sturdy young man, having been champion wrestler of Navinshire. He is a nephew of Jas. Lockhart, head of the tea and coffee department of the Robert Simpson Co., Toronto.

MARITIME PROVINCES.

An overall factory, with all of its contents, was destroyed at Pugwash, N.S.

Macauley Bros. & Co., of St. John, whose premises were damaged by fire some time ago, have had a new front put in and the various departments fitted up better than ever.

R. L. Black, of Fredericton, has returned from a visit to Toronto and other western centres. He attended the Canadian National Exhibition. Mr. Black looks forward to a very busy season in the Maritime Provinces.

D. Darroch, proprietor of Rueben, Tuplin & Co., Kensington, P.E.I., was in Toronto during Exhibition. He reports business good on the Island, but deplores the unsatisfactory conditions that too often prevail in connection with transportation facilities between the Island and the mainland during the Winter months. He is not pessimistic, however, and believes that it is only a question of time before more satisfactory conditions will obtain.

WEST.

H. H. Smith, a prominent merchant tailor of Winnipeg, is dead.

Reports submitted at a meeting of the Winnipeg Development and Industrial Bureau shows that many manufacturers are considering that city as a location for a factory.

Lyle, MacGowan, Limited, Vancouver, has been granted a charter under British Columbia law to carry on a wholesale and retail haberdashery and clothing and dyeing business.

George W. Baldwin, of Winnipeg, buyer for a St. Paul, Minn., fur house, died at the age of seventy years. His demise followed an injury received by being struck by a street car.

QUEBEC.

F. I. Town, with Geo. H. Evans & Son., Montreal, is at present out west, showing all new novelties of his firm, for the Christmas trade.

The officers and buyers of the S. Carsley Co., Montreal, tendered Samuel Carsley, Sr., a banquet, in celebration of his fiftieth year in Canada, at the Place Viger Hotel, September 21.

The stock of Gilmour, Nephew & Co., 366 St. Paul street, Montreal, has been consigned to J. A. Ouimet, manufacturers' agent and jobber, who has moved from Notre Dame street, to above address.

Henry Morgan & Co., Montreal, have thoroughly renovated the interior of their large premises, corner of Philips Square and St. Catherine street. These alterations show up the various departments to great advantage.

The John Murphy Co., Montreal, have added another wing to their now large and commodious quarters, corner of St. Catherine and Metcalf streets. This new wing gives this firm much additional space, both inside and as regards window displays.

W. B. Mowat, dress goods buyer for the John Murphy Co., Montreal, returned beginning of month from a trip to New York. Mr. Mowat was in all the various fashion centres gathering all the latest ideas and new shades for his department. He thinks that Montreal, in the matter of window display, is fast outstripping New York.

A paragraph in Quebec notes in the September issue of The Review conveyed the impression that A. H. wheeler, late of Debenhams' (Canada), Ltd., had joined partnership with P. Zerboni, silk agent, 224 Coristine building, Montreal. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Wheeler has been appointed traveler only for this firm. The correction is gladly made.

TORONTO Cor. Bay and Wellington Sts.

Dress goods buying for the coming Spring is hanging fire to a degree that is exasperating to agents here. With almost one accord buyers are holding back orders for a future date. The poor season experienced last Spring, and the quantity of stock carried over, is one reason, and the present money stringency is another. One thing is sure—if advance orders are delayed much longer, Spring deliveries promise to be late and uncertain. Deliveries of Fall fabrics have been very well made, and there is little complaint under this heading. Strenuous protests against the extremely high prices ruling now are, however, frequently heard.

Things are rather quiet in the dress trade. The weather has not been cold enough to start the counter trade in the retail stores, and until stocks are somewhat broken into, repeats cannot be hoped for. That things have not been quieter in the jobbing houses is due to the fact that garment manufacturers are depending largely upon the jobbing houses for materials to work up. Advances were so steep that many did not cover when the season opened up.

The market is still hardening and manufacturers are advancing prices for the finished fabric. An advance of 2d. per yard has been declared since the beginning of the month. This is due to the short supply of merino wool. Notwithstanding the fact that the merino crop of 1906-7 was a large one there is little wool in the manufacturers' hands. Cross-breds, that were sagging a little time ago, are hardening now. This is due to the high price of merinos, and to heavy buying in Bradford on the part of manufacturers in the United States.

Taffeta Panama.
Novelty Twist Stripe for Spring, 1908.

Striped Chiffon Voile for Spring, 1908.

Materials for Spring, 1908

Plain Fabrics the Best Sellers, but Fancies Also Shown —Much Interest in the New Voiles—Lightweight Worsteds for Tailor-Mades.

The number of voile samples shown, and the way in which this fabric is selling points to it as a leader for next Spring.

Both plain and fancy voiles are shown. Many of these fancies are but one remove from plain effects, being in solid color. Stripes and striped grounds are the leading novelty, though checks are not absent from the showing. The best liked stripe effects are those presenting two contrasting colors. Pekin effects, in many novelty lines are shown, but, as yet, they have not aroused much interest. White grounds are shown, but they are well covered with the pattern, stripes of one or of two colors being most frequently used. In solid colors, voiles are shown with heavier lines, giving a hairline effect. These come only in black and the darker colors. Some very sheer weaves in voiles are shown and there seems to be considerable favor shown in these transparent fabrics.

For the Spring tailored suit, lightweight piece-dyed plain and fancy worsteds are the materials brought out. The range includes wool taffetas, panamas, taffeta panamas, fine French serges, fine poplins, etc. Panamas promise to be big sellers, as this is a cloth that looks well and wears well, and can be produced at a popular price.

Plain goods certainly lead, but fancies are also shown. These fancies include fine worsteds in phantom effects, fancy stripes, in solid colors, or plain grounds, with faint stripes made by the introduction of twist yarn in a contrasting color.

Spring, 1908, will see darker shades selling, as the color tendency in woollen goods is downwards, and away from white. Blue is certain of great prominence, not only as a ground color, but as a combination in fancy effects. Odd shades of blue, such as delft, nattier, Copenhagen, peacock, etc., as well as navies and royals, will be called for. There is still a good deal of interest in brown, and all browns, particularly light tans, biscuit, etc., will be in evidence. Plum and lilac shades promise to be fairly well worn, as they are much favored in Paris at the present time. The reds also are making a gain.

Lilac, green, cerise, cardinal and old gold will be the chief illuminating colors seen in stripes and cross bars.

Chevron effects, in fancy worsteds, where the stripe is just visible, come in many combinations.

The Review, recognizing the fact that an illustration is of more value than a bare description, has made an attempt to show the leading lines in the new Spring goods. The fancies are of such a nature that there is no possible process that will effectively reproduce them. The best of the series of cuts made is given, and The Review only regrets that the rest cannot also be printed. The best that, under the circumstances, can be done, is to describe the cloths.

Fine French Worsteds for Spring, 1908.

A number that The Review would have liked to show were phantom effects in lightweight, smooth-finished worsteds. Stripes predominated here, though some block checks were shown. Another class was cloths of a fine herringbone weave, with narrow stripes, made of a fancy twist thread in a lighter and a darker shade than the ground. There were fancy panamas, showing broken stripes of a twist thread in a contrasting color, the stripe and the space between being of equal width. Also a white ground fabric with stripes in two pastel shades, edged with one of a darker color. The French worsteds which are shown, though the cut is not a particularly good one, are: No. 1, striped worsted, in solid color, having a raised hairline stripe produced by introducing a heavy cord; No. 2, a striped batiste in self-color; No. 3, solid colored worsted, with fancy stripe; No. 4, solid colored batiste, with pebble stripe. No. 5, is another fancy striped worsted fabric.

Broadcloths in First Place

Plain cloths have sold remarkably well for Fall, and in this class lightweight broadcloths continue to hold first place. Brown, in many shades, is still the strongest seller, but there is no indication of any one color dominating the season this Fall. Blue is making a gain, and navy has a high place, as it is always an excellent Winter color. There is a feeling growing for odd shades in blue, and this class of colors promises to strengthen its position as the season advances. Deep, rich greens are popular, and some lovely shades of this color are included in Fall lines. Dark reds are coming rapidly to the front rank. Deep rubies and garnets are taking the lead of the wine shades. Purple and plum, though good in millinery, have not yet made a decided impression upon the dress trade, and it is a case of "may be" or "may not" with these colors at the present time. The fact that purple and violet have been much worn during August by Parisian elegantes—coats and parasols in these colors being conspicuously prominent—would lead to the supposition that more will be heard of them later. This will probably be in the Fall of 1908.

Silks and Velvets

The outlook for silks is exceptionally good, not only for the present season, but for the Spring of 1908. Taffetas, as usual, lead in the consumption. In plains, besides the regular uses, more foundation silks are selling. Fancy silks are decidedly strong. The waist manufacturers have bought largely of fancy and tartan plaids. For the counter trade, French plaids and the newer stripe patterns are well taken. Stripe grounds, with spot patterns, are the latest, coin spots in the lead.

Soft weaves, such as surahs, messalines, etc., with satin stripes, are new, and striped chiffon cloths are being extensively shown by the better trade. The exclusive trade is taking sheer silks—marquisettes, voiles, chiffons, nets and gauzes in striped patterns, in printed floral borders and velvet patterned goods.

For the Spring of 1908 silks promise extra prominence. It is too early to particularize novelties, but rough weaves—pongees, tussahs, shantungs—will be again good sellers. They will be shown in all the leading colors, but this year will be best in natural shades. Foulards promise to be better than for many seasons past, and should strengthen the position they have taken during the past Spring and Summer. Spot patterns promise prominence.

The fact that velvets are big sellers and very high in price is no news to the trade. Velveteen manufacturers are extra busy so much so that they are asking several months for delivery. The run of orders, high price of cotton, labor etc., is boosting prices, and velveteens are at a high figure and very scarce just now. This fabric has been so much improved during the past few years in appearance, wear and coloring, that it is in high favor with smartly dressed women.

THE "PIRLE" FINISH

"Indispensable for the Open-Air Girl."

"Lady's Realm" says:

"The out-door girl who loves to cycle, walk and drive will never wear anything but a 'PIRLE' costume when she has once donned one. It may be the shower of May or the storm of November, her neat cloth dress will remain unspotted and unshrunk, and, when dry, will be as fresh as when it came from the tailors' hands."

"IN FASHION'S WHIRL."

"Madge," in "Truth," says:

"Every dressmaker ought to leave out a bit of selvedge somewhere with the 'PIRLE' stamp on it, as this affords an absolute guarantee for the wearer. The proprietors undertake to make good any material so stamped that has been actually damaged by rain."

DRESS ACCESSORIES

Lace

Bands and All-Overs Promise to be Big Sellers—Filet Antique, Filet, Cluny and Irish Crochet.

Buying for the early Fall is practically over, and nothing in the way of novelty can now be expected until import orders come to hand. Though the retail houses have made their initial show for the present season, selling has not commenced and the buying public has yet to pass judgment. It is still early, and the absence of selling is not worrying buyers, for they know that laces will be freely used this Fall.

Filet Antique.

Bands promise to increase in favor, and band trimmings are to be more used than edgings. Edgings will be chiefly employed for sleeve trimmings. All-over laces, and nets, are another class, for which a larger vogue is expected. Buying has been along these lines, but promises to be more extended in this direction.

When early orders were given, black laces were somewhat overlooked, and considerable filling-in has taken place since. There have been some fairly good orders placed for black valenciennes. Guipure and Venise bands, and filet bands with heavy fibre silk embroideries, are becoming considerable sellers.

Heavy orders have been placed for Valenciennes laces, and the trade has some big selling to do. The demand, however, is a wide one, as this lace is so much used for so many purposes that no trouble is expected.

In the States the heavier laces are again being taken up. The laces most shown now in New York are of the heavy kind. The leading novelty certainly is filet in all its varieties. Filet antique is much in evidence. This lace made a sudden leap into prominence five years ago this Fall, and had a splendid run then. Some months ago The Review reported that Paris dressmakers were placing large orders for this lace. It is made in large quantities by the peasant women of the south of France. Machine-made filets, and filet effects, with the pattern darned into the net, are also strongly in evidence, not only in bands, but in all-over laces and nets. Cluny is another leading lace, and there is a big revival of interest in Irish crochet. These three laces are used in combination upon expensive waists and gowns. Guipure and Venise laces are also shown, and in the lighter laces princesse applique and lierre are most seen. A strong feature is the big use of dress nets, particularly plain filet and plain and embroidered Brussels nets. Filet all-overs, Venise guipure and crochet all-overs, as well as embroidered nets, are also much used. Spotted and patterned nets are made into chemisettes, guimpes, etc.

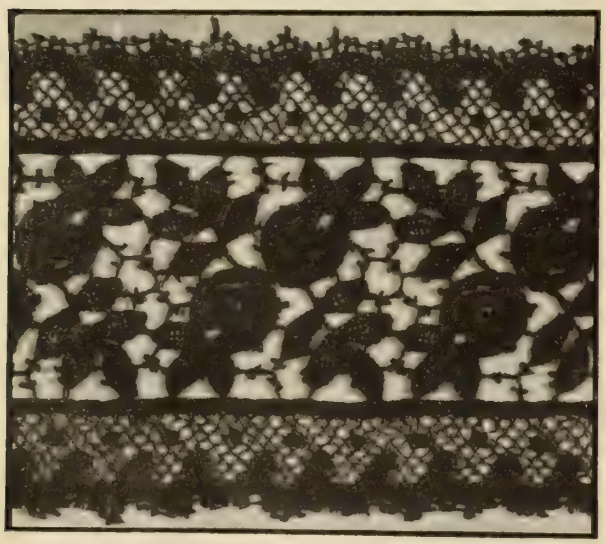
There is scarcely such a furore for Valenciennes, but, nevertheless, it is much in evidence. This lace never goes out of style, but is not so much in the limelight as it was a few months ago.

Embroidered net and lace robes are very much in vogue, and so are spangled net robes, particularly in nacre and irridescent effects. Evening shades, and black, show spangles to match. The newest form in which spangles are put on is in long lines.

Embroideries

Bandings a Feature—Wide Flouncings and Wide Bindings Leading Novelties.



Indications are that there will be an excellent demand for embroideries. Patterns are desirable and show a considerable amount of novelty. Except for staple lines, the soft finished nainsook and batiste cloths are much in evidence. Lacy effects, particularly in filet combinations, are the high novelty. As in laces, bandings are in excellent request, but are not such exclusive sellers. A novelty in bandings shows eyelet holes, through which a ribbon is threaded. Bandings come in sets. In the choicer numbers the sets include all-over, bandings, beadings, edge and insertions.

Black Filet Band, with Wood-Silk Embroidery.

A new feature is the very wide beadings. These are used to trim underwear, and to head the deep knee flounces on lingerie skirts. Beadings come in sets, and all the widths will be employed on the different pieces of an underwear set. There is still a call for medallions. Very wide flouncings are showing, running from 25 in. up to a yard wide.

Edgings and insertions are good in the popular priced goods. Corset cover embroideries will be a big factor. Many new effects are shown, mostly in neat patterns. Semi-ready covers, which only require a little work on them to finish for wear, are being taken to some extent.

The new filet embroideries are the high novelty. Lacey patterns are strong, but eyelet, blind and French effects are all shown in good patterns. Some new designs are developed in mercerized and silk-embroidered goods. Embroidery prices continue firm, but Sehiffli goods are a little easier.

Ladies' Neckwear

Neckwear a Big Line for Fall, Also One That Includes Many Novelties—Detachable Jabots and Bows the Latest Novelty.

Fall neckwear promises to be very varied, and it is the extent of the line that makes business good. Early trade has been done largely upon chiffon stuff, but novelties are now making their appearance.

There still reigns the same uncertainty about the future of stiff linen collars. Many pretty effects are shown, but as far as The Review can learn, though sales have been better than last month, they are only moving slowly.

An importing house, wishing to provide for the future, wrote to their travelers out on the road for their opinion upon the subject. Replies received from all parts of the Dominion brought out the fact that merchants generally had stocked them, and still had a large portion of their stock on hand. The most favorable reply came from the Winnipeg ground, and even here the remark was added that they had not done so well as anticipated.

In Canada, at any rate, soft turn-downs with wide bands promise to sell very much better than the stiff collars. These are now beginning to sell, and to wear with them dainty lace and silk bows are being taken. These smart little affairs are of fluted lace, of Irish lace, edged with valenciennes ; of mull, edged with lace, and also of ribbon and silk.

Another novelty is the jabot, which is unattached to any stock, and pins on under a bow or twist of silk. The majority are of lace, but they are also made of mull and of silk, edged with lace. These are shown in moderate-sized and also in long effects. They can be worn either with stiff or soft turn-down collars, or can be pinned on to the front of a waist with a guimpe or a blouse that has the high attached collar. This is the way they are being worn in Paris, and the waist we illustrate shows the manner in which they are worn in that city. Later on, when the wearing of suits and coats becomes general, many of these jabots will be used to fill up the opening in the front. They will also be excellent for wear with fur coats.

Fancy Silk Bow.
Shown by Rhys D. Fairbairn.

Just at present, pointed stocks without tabs or jabots are the best sellers, but jabot styles should come in later, as they are always good for the holiday trade.

Fancy stocks in straight band effects of lace, chiffon, ribbon and ruching, and with a fancy bow in front, are a promising novelty.

Tabs and turn-overs are good, and are shown in dainty lines, both in nainsook embroideries, heavy linen and mercerized embroideries, and lace. A novelty feature that promises well for Fall is a turn-over of China silk and chiffon, embroidered in art shades. This should form a popular finish for the fashionable fancy silk blouses now worn.

There is the usual steady demand for lace stock collars, and here again the pointed collar is preferred to the tab shapes. Lace collars of this class are staple articles now, as they are highly favored for morning wear, and by elderly women.

Yoke effects are well in the limelight, not only in machine-made, but also in the expensive hand-made laces. Handsome yokes of Brussels, Bruges, Maltese and Princesse lace are showing, and Irish crochet yokes are high style. In the imitation laces, crochet and filet effects, and filet and guipure, are leaders, and there are good styles also in other laces. A line that always sells and is often neglected by buyers is children's lace collars. These come in the round, shoulder shape, and can be had in popular-priced, as well as expensive lines. The dark, rich colors so fashionable this Fall should lead to a big sale of these collars if they are only shown.

New Paris Waist, Japanese Sleeve and Guimpe, showing Beau Brummel Jabot Attached to Waist with Bow.

Ruchings are in excellent demand. The costume idea, and also the silk waist with collar attached, making them exceptionally good. The latest New York idea is a ruching made of cloth of gold.

Coat sets promise to be a big feature. The linen and mercerized rep sets are decorated with heavy padded embroidery. In New York these sets are universally worn and the embroidery is worked in nattier blue, and in tan on the white ground—here white on white is the choice. The big popularity of the plain tailored suit is creating the demand for these sets. Lace sets are also selling, and here filet is much in evidence. Though all filet sets are seen, filet in combination with other laces, principally Irish crochet, guipure and Venise are those in vogue.

Collar and cuff sets are selling well. Handsome sets in Irish and Brussels laces are shown in the exclusive stores. The laces and lace combinations spoken of above are those selling in the popular end of the trade.

In the high-class stores boas and ruffs of coque, marabout and tulle are selling. This is a feature that has never taken any strong hold with the popular trade.

Windsors are in for their usual Winter run. 'Plaid Windsors, as might be expected, are particularly good. There is some call for lace scarfs. Lovely scarfs in chiffon and liberty silk in floral, Persian and striped patterns, in ivory, white, pink, ciel, lavender, and yellowish tan, are showing for street and evening wear. Scarfs of Spanish lace, in black and white, are also selling.

Gloves

Fair Spring Demand for Long Fabric and Kid Gloves—Merchants Buying on Hand-to-Mouth Plan.

Conditions in the glove trade are somewhat easier than a year ago. Retailers find long gloves still very much in demand, with short lengths in fair request. Tans, blacks, whites, grays, navies and greens, in the order mentioned are the colors to the fore just now. The 12 and 16-button lengths continue to hold first position in glace finish. There is very little demand for suede finish at retail. Later on, wool gloves will become prominent, when the cold weather sets in, and window displays will feature them for a few days.

To the retailer, prices are a little easier than last year, as manufacturers have prepared themselves better to meet the demand for the present season. Deliveries are much improved, this Fall being a few weeks ahead of previous ones.

Most jobbers find the demand for Spring, 1908 is for long gloves—fabric and kid—with wrist lengths following. Prices are slightly lower, although not so much in long gloves as in wrist lengths. The reason for this is that short gloves have not been selling very freely and large stocks are the result. Deliveries for Spring are expected to be up to the mark, manufacturers being over their rush and not extra busy. Further, buyers for the United States have large stocks on hand, and are only placing small orders; in fact, the average buyer here, just now, is buying on the hand-to-mouth plan. Merchants are a little uncertain yet, as regards styles. Blacks still continue to be the leading and staple color, with tan and golden brown following up strong. There has been quite a feeling for long chamois gloves this Fall, and it is very likely that they will be strong sellers for Spring. These gloves are of regular soft chamois leather. They come in natural color and are washable. This glove can be retailed from $1.50 to $2.50, according to quality.

Gloves for Holiday Trade

Look After Your Glove Stock at Once, and Prepare for Christmas Business.

Gloves always form an important item in holiday selling, and there is always a good deal of sorting-up done by merchants for this season. High-class fancies, and gloves that, because of price, do not sell freely as a general rule, can now be stocked. It will not be wise to wait for this extra stock until selling commences; you should at once make out your lists, and send them in. If you get your orders in early, you make sure of the goods when they are wanted.

You should make a good profit on these goods this year, as you can get the very highest prices for Christmas gloves. Moreover, you will be helping your department, and increasing its prestige in a way that will help in the future, by stocking a line of fashionable fancies, for holiday selling. The glove famine, the vogue of long gloves, and the consequent high prices, have established a different definition for glove values in your customers' minds, and your holiday trade ought to run into money. Women who used to grumble at paying $1.25 and $1.50 for short gloves have not objected to paying $3 and $3.50 for long ones. You may do a glove business, that is worth your while, if you lay yourself out for it. The eight-button, twelve-button and sixteen-button lengths are the chief sellers, and the staple street colors are black, medium tans, dark tans, brown, grey and white. Large city stores are also carrying reds, blues and greens. Purple is a leading accessory color, and a few purple, and plum gloves might be shown.

There is a tendency toward matching gloves and gowns, and while this is not a desirable condition to encourage, a small selection, carefully chosen, with reference to the novelty colors in your dress stock, would make a display that would attract attention. These would sell, as gloves for Christmas gifts are generally selected with regard to some particular suit or gown.

Long silk gloves, for evening wear, are assured of a big sale. The novelty color just now is pale pink. White is, as usual, the heavy seller, but tints are certainly in much higher favor than generally.

Long kids, and silks, in very pale shades—neutral tints—in grey, tan, and mode, are good. The ultra fashion is for yellowish tan, and pale yellow gloves, but this has hardly touched the Canadian trade as yet.

In short gloves, silk-lined mochas are always popular, with present buyers, and to these gloves, this year, may be added gauntlet lines.

To the merchant who wants to capture the Christmas glove trade, The Review would say: Do not delay an instant in making your arrangements, and in selecting and ordering your Christmas stock. Make an early window display, and also a case display of your choicest selections, frequently changing the latter in a prominent place in your store. When a dress window or millinery window is put in, insist upon gloves to match being made a feature.

Give a glove sale for the holidays—not just a cut price sale, though you should use broken lines, or lines that will supply leads for the rest of your stock. For these sales some merchants sell printed glove bonds, calling for goods at a certain price. The idea is that a bond may be used as a gift, and the recipient goes in and selects for herself. The price may be marked in cipher.

Get some pretty glove boxes, but do not have your name printed on them. Put a business card inside instead. Your customers will appreciate this.

Ribbons

Preparations for Christmas Trade—Large Advance Order Business Reported—Velvet Ribbons High.

The ribbon situation, in retail circles, looks very promising indeed. Window displays in large city stores are prominent. Just now merchants are making preparations for the Christmas trade. They are picking up all fresh ideas as regards making new things from ribbons, such as cushion tops, for instance.

Ribbons most in demand at present writing are plain effects. The sale of velvet ribbons also continues active, with colors very hard to procure. This line has advanced fully 33 1-3 per cent., within the last three months, aggregating a general advance of over 50 per cent. over figures ruling one year ago. The demand for staple goods continues strong. Taffetas and Duchess satin ribbons are having the close attention of retailers. Fancy ribbons at present are rather slow movers, but later on are expected to pick up and once more gain their old standing. Colors to the fore are browns, greens, purples, greys and navies, in the order mentioned. Blacks, always staple, are also very fashionable, while white ribbons are rather behind schedule. Prices are firm.

Shown by Walter H. Barry & Co., Montreal.

Even at this early date there is no longer any doubt that the approaching Spring season will again prove a profitable one to all concerned, notwithstanding the fact that ribbons are at their highest position in years, with respect to price.

At present jobbers are finding the ribbon trade all that could be asked for. Orders are being placed to the satisfaction of everybody. As a result, wholesalers are looking forward to one of the best seasons yet known to the trade.

Manufacturers, also, state that business is active. They are booking large orders. French and Swiss manufacturers report large advance order business.

The feeling is very strong for all lines of ribbons for the approaching season. Lines now shown for Spring comprise many new novelties, both in design and color. Taffetas are again expected to be strong, while staple lines will be to the fore. A very good season for velvet ribbons is looked for, notwithstanding the fact that the price quotations are extremely high.

Floral Ribbon.
Shown by Walter H. Barry & Co., Montreal.

Colors for Spring, which are sure to meet with popular favor, are browns, tans and violet colors. Black will also be seen in abundance.

Prices, however, average 25 to 35 per cent. higher than those quoted one year ago. Some lines are higher, while others are lower.

Coat and Suit Styles

What New York is Showing in Coats and Suits—Tailored Styles Much in Evidence.

The women of New York have most enthusiastically adopted the tailored suit. They have even taken to it for Summer wear. Tailored suits of white, half-bleached and natural shades, and of pink, blue, mauve, and pale green linens, as well as of heavy rough weaves in silk in the same colorings, have been universally worn at all the Summer resorts. The style in which these suits were made was severely mannish, the skirt short, showing the feet plainly. It was laid in broad pleats and trimmed with one, two or three folds. The illustration, "Miss New York," shows the style. Almost its only rival is the Japanese suit, made with a guimpe of lace or net. These suits are generally made of plain, striped or checked taffeta, or of pongee, shantung, foulard, or printed China silk. These latter silks are almost always in ring and coin-spot patterns. The tailored suit is out in full force for the Fall season. Suits may be divided into two classes, plain tailored suits, and fancy tailored suits. They both, however, are strictly tailored.

Free use is made of fancy cloths, chiefly, though, for the plain tailored styles. Plain cloth, which, as a rule, means broadcloth, is reserved for the dressy suit. The colors selling are garnet, blue, brown, green, and grey—not grey mixture, but taupe, nickel, etc., in plain shade.

The popular suit at present is cut exactly like the Summer suit. There are also many forms of cutaways. Those in best style are about 18 inches long, below the waist at the back. What is known as the finger-length coat is a popular length. This is a coat that ends where the fingertips reach when the arm is hanging down. The feeling is for longer coat lengths, and many of the coats showing are 45 and 50 inches long.

The majority of the coats shown are what is termed easy-fitting, that is, they do not fit perfectly tight to the waist. They do, however, define the figure, and unless placed side by side with a fitting coat, the fact that they are not quite fitting could not be detected. The Paris tailor-made gives exactly this effect. The fact that the waist is not perfectly fitted gives the slender hip effect that is the latest style idea this Fall.

The Paris tailor-made also shows what a prominent trimming feature the pocket is made at the present time.

Popular Coat Style. Shown by J. H. Waldman & Co., Montreal.

Stylish Suit, Manufactured By J. H. Waldman & Co., Montreal.

The Tailored Suit for Fall, as Seen in New York.

The more elaborate suits are made of chiffon broadcloth and velvet, and though strictly tailored, are very ornate in appearance. They are trimmed with heavy silk braids, soutache, velvet, and fancy embroidery bands The vest, which is generally present, is of velvet or cloth, and elaborately trimmed. Some of the newest suits have an Eton coat, with a circular skirt added. This skirt is cut with points back and front, giving an overskirt effect. Redingote styles, with the skirt attached at the waist, and fitting closely over the hips, but with considerable fullness around the bottom, is another good style. The Japanese sleeve is often a feature in these suits.

to the figure. Some fitted and semi-fitted models lead, but at present the loose styles have decidedly the biggest following.

The accepted length seems to be 45 to 50 inches. Sleeves are long and fairly full, with cuff of velvet and braid matching the collar.

More lined coats are on the market this year than for many seasons past. Broadcloth and kersey are the leading cloths. Black is to be the heavy seller, but many colored coats are also expected to sell. Some purples and violets are shown. This is more because Paris has taken to this color than from any expectation of great business

A Paris Tailor-Made.

Plain tailored suits have the full-length coat sleeve, but very many suits have the sleeve made in three-quarter and seven-eighths, so many, in fact, that it is difficult to credit the fact that the elbow sleeve is on the wane. The fashionable skirt is the one laid in wide pleats, trimmed with folds of the material. The only other shape at all prominent is the many-gored circular skirt, also trimmed with the deep folds.

The style idea in coats for Fall seems to be long and loose, though not so loose as when box-backs were the fashion. The new back is circular, having a seam up the middle of the back, and giving some amount of definition resulting. Ruby, brown, leather, old blue and hunter's green are the chief colors. There is a long list of novelties in carriage and evening wraps. Purple and mauve are well considered here. China blue, apricot, biscuit, petunia, etc., are all good colors.

Short coats in both covert and broadcloth have been tried and found wanting. Buyers have simply passed them by for Fall. The only short coats on the market are those of imitation fur. The interest taken in these lines promises to make up for any lack of interest in other lines. They are mostly in pony styles and are trimmed with braid. Many have a vest effect in velvet or cloth, trimmed with braid and fancy embroidery trimmings. Some long, loose styles are on the market, and also some fanciful models in Japanese shapes.

Skirts

Conditions at Retail—The Spring Lines—Prices Are Higher.

In retail circles the pleated skirt is again proving the big line for Fall. Folds with strappings of braid are taking very well. Voile skirts, with silk strappings, are also selling freely. Panama and voile material in blacks, browns and a few navies are the leading cloths and colors.

The outlook for Spring, 1908, in the skirt line is good. Materials to be used principally are panamas, lustres and voiles. For early Spring, tweeds and a new striped effect will be shown. Pleated effects in skirts will continue to hold first position. Quite a feeling has already been experienced for tailor-made lines in the better class goods. Trimmings for next season will be more or less trimmed with taffeta silk.

Travelers are now on the road showing the various lines of the wholesale houses. Prices will be somewhat higher on account of the large advances in price of materials in all lines. Deliveries are expected to be good, as manufacturers are preparing themselves to meet the demand.

"Please sir, have you a match?" asked a small boy of a hurrying pedestrian.

"No, I have not!" snapped the man.

"Then buy some!" exclaimed the boy, as he held out a handful of boxes.

Waists

Net Waists and All-over Lace Waists Shown in New York—Immense Showing of Plaid and Striped Taffeta.

The leading waists on the New York market at the present time are those of net. These are selling in quantities and are made of Brussels and filet nets. The trimming laces are filet, or filet antique, cluny, and Irish crochet. Sometimes all three laces are used in combination, sometimes guipure is used instead of the crochet.

The Latest New York Style. Wide Pleats, Trimmed with Two Folds. Shown by Rhys D. Fairbairn.

These are, of course, expensive models, but though other laces are substituted for trimmings, net waists are equally good for the popular trade. Waists of all-over lace are also good sellers. There is a yoke of one or other lace, and the rest of the trimming is applied in long lines extending fron the yoke. This trimming is of bands or lace insertion.

Suit Showing Overskirt Idea.

An Evening Cloak.

Another feature of the late Fall showing is the many waists of chiffon. These come in all colors, and are made up over a lining of white China silk. The trimmings consist of silk bands and soutache braid. Little yoke effects are of net or lace and a trimming of tucked net and lace finishes the sleeve.

Waists of messaline and crepe-de-chine are thought well of in the States. They are plainly made in tailored styles and have for trimmings small folds of the material, trimmed with French knots.

Miss New York.

The great showing is made of tailored and semi-tailored waists in plaid and striped silks. The collection is so great and styles are so varied that description is impossible. Plain taffetas also make a big showing.

Novelty waists show a free use of Japanese models, and, judging from what is seen in New York, we may expect this style to influence wash waists for the coming Spring.

Canadian manufacturers have not yet fully completed sample lines for next Spring. Lines for January delivery have been shown, and sales are highly satisfactory, but for later on in the season, sample lines are not as yet completed. The new filet and lace embroideries, when translated into waists, have met with a good reception, and waists trimmed with them have been big sellers. The three-quarter is the accepted sleeve, and few long ones are either shown or asked for.

Lingerie Garments

Lingerie Styles for January Delivery—More Interest Shown in Combination Garments.

Notwithstanding the fact that prices are very high, and showing as they do a considerable advance over last year, orders are steadily coming in for January white-wear, and manufacturers will have all they can do to make delivery.

Though the advance is general on all lines, its full extent is in most cases very cleverly concealed. Of course, it is more apparent in the low lines, as there is less chance of concealment there. To justify present advances it is only necessary to remind buyers that manufacturers are having to pay more for everything that goes into a garment. Not only materials, trimmings, etc., are at a much higher value, but selling and manufacturing expenses are also increased. Makers of white-wear, waists, etc., are paying—taking a general average—fully 50 per cent. to 60 per cent. more for the materials used in the production of their line than two years ago. Nor can there be any doubt as to the continuance of the present price level for some time yet.

The new garment lines are very complete and attractive. The Canadian trade is taking an increased interest in combination garments, and more orders are being placed for them this year. These garments are being shown built upon particularly good lines. The fashionable woman wants them, as they do away with all folds and creases, and make the outer garments set better. The garments shown this year are fitted with gores and darts, instead of gathers, and are set together with lines of beading and ribbons. A novelty shape this season has a princesse front, the beading coming from the sides belt fashion. This is a particularly good fitting style, and gives a perfect line in front. Other combination garments include the three-piece suit—corset cover, drawers and short petticoat, all in one.

There is the usual interest in matched sets, and over a certain price all garments come in sets, so that they can be sold together or separately.

The slip-over style still rules in gowns, and the Japanese sleeve is the latest feature here.

Corsets

Good Opening Trade—Big Interest Taken in Corset Windows.

The Fall activity has already set in, and the corset department is a busy one in the retail stores. Customers have been reminded of the need of corsets by window displays and well-worded advertising. Now that there are fashions in corsets, and the outline changes every few seasons, women are always interested in the showing of the new lines. A woman no longer has just to buy a corset—she must have one built upon the latest lines if her gown is to have the proper appearance.

City stores have been drawing attention to corsets by means of special window displays. These displays have a preponderance of the new styles made up in colored satins, flowered silk, batistes, etc. These models, in many cases, belong to the manufacturer and are lent for display purposes.

Changes in shape this season are slight. Present models are particularly good, and the long hip, high bust models are not yet perfectly popularized. These models gained a good hold last season, and now that Paris has declared that hips are no longer fashionable their success should be assured.

Considerable attention was attracted to a waist-lengthening corset shown recently. This corset is cut with a girdle that encircles the waist, and the side gores of the skirt seemingly spring out from under the girdle.

The Fall Openings

A Successful Season is Indicated—Bigger Varieties Necessary to Meet the Increasingly Critical Demand.

Everything at present points to a successful selling season for suit and skirt departments. Times are fairly prosperous, and if the right thing is properly shown sales are not difficult to make. But with more money to spend women are becoming more critical as to style, cut and finish, and it must be confessed that it takes more variety in ready-to-wear lines to do the business now. This condition has its advantages and its disadvantages. It necessitates the keeping of a larger stock on the part of the merchant, and means a more extended line of samples to be shown by the manufacturer. It also means that the department has a wider range and appeals to a larger circle than formerly. This means greater care in cut and finish, but as this class of customer is able and willing to pay for it, such a clientele is worth catering for.

Suits are the line first wanted in the season, and particularly in the expensive garments the displays at retail have been large and elaborate. It is not only the large retail houses and departmental stores that are carrying suits and other garment lines. Some of the larger furriers are handling them, and also there are some houses now who make a speciality of cloaks, suits and skirts exclusively, or, in conjunction with whitewear, millinery and kindred lines. Apparently the styles are very varied, but on examination they all resolve themselves into the two or three popular types. Some of the styles very popular in large Montreal ready-to-wear departments are hip-length cutaway coat suits, and the 3-4 lengths in fancy tailor-made garments, Prince, Chap and Empire styles are also selling well. Semi-fitting styles are to the fore.

The popular priced suit is developed in gray tweeds and mixtures. Stripes are also largely shown, while the feeling for serges, for practical purposes, was never better. Broadcloth is certainly the chosen material for the high-class Fall suit.

Broad-tail coats are being shown in short-fitted hip-length, trimmed with fancy braids and buttons. These coats are also shown in long, loose styles. One distinctive feature which marks the Fall suit, is—no matter what the shape of the coat, and shapes are many—the elaborate trimming. Flat military braid trimmings are being used largely.

Australian Wool Trade

Past Season's Clip the Largest on Record, and High Prices Have Been Received—The Sheep Returns.

A review of the Australasian wool trade for the year 1906-1907 has just been issued, and the statistics presented are recognized as authoritative in all parts of the world where wool is handled, writes D. H. Ross Canadian commercial agent at Melbourne. Not only has the past season's clip been a record one, but the prices realized have been the highest for the last twenty-five years. The Australian exports reached 1,663,130 bales, and the New Zealand exports 427,058 bales, making the grand total for Australasia 2,090,188 bales, thus not only a record, but also being the first time the 2,000,000 mark has been reached. It is estimated that an additional 40,000 bales has been required for home manufactures, which must be added to the figures relating to the total clip. The average price realized for each bale in the local markets was £14 3s. 11d., so that the total production has added £30,239,794 to the wealth of Australasia. The growing popularity of the wool sales in Australia and New Zealand is evidenced by the fact that 74 per cent. was sold prior to export.

Production in Each State, and New Zealand.

Through various reasons the exports of wool from each State in 1906-1907 do not indicate the actual production. The shipment figures from each State and New Zealand are as follows:

	Bales.
New South Wales	837,869
Victoria	506,650
Queensland	117,550
South Australia	146,431
Western Australia	40,789
Tasmania	13,841
New Zealand	427,058
	2,090,188

Australasian Sheep Returns.

Sheep numbers as at the close of the year, compared with twelve months previously, show a net increase of 9,711,782 head. The totals in Australasia now reach 103,548,330, and for the first time since 1897 (ten years ago) exceed 100,000,000. The returns for the various States and New Zealand are the latest available figures:

States.	Sheep in 1906.
New South Wales	44,132,421
Victoria	12,937,440
Queensland	14,886,438
South Australia	6 700,000
West Australia	3,200,000
Tasmania	1,583,560
Australian States	83,439,859
New Zealand	20,108,471
Total Australasia	103,548,330

ENVIABLE POSITION OF AN ENGLISH FIRM.

T. W. Bastin, chairman of Bastin, Merryfield & Cracknell, Limited, London, England, will visit Canada shortly. This company is not much more than ten years "young," and to-day it occupies an enviable position in the eyes of the English retail trade, and, indeed, in the eyes of many Canadian houses. Bastin, Merryfield & Cracknell occupy splendid new premises in the west end of London, close to Oxford Circus, the very centre of the fashionable shopping district. As Canadian visitors to London are well aware, the majority of the wholesale houses are to be found in the neighborhood of St. Paul's churchyard and of Wood street, but Bastin, Merryfield & Cracknell broke through convention right at the start, and their departure from the orthodox fashion has been amply justified by results.

It would be impossible to refer in detail to the many departments, which include, principally, laces, costumes and millinery. One cannot visit any one of these departments without being impressed with the atmosphere of good tone and taste which pervades the whole house. There is a certain delicacy of perception, a note of distinction and refinement, evidenced in all their goods, which is one of the most pronounced characteristics of the house, and which is helping to make this firm a force in the English trade to-day. It is one of the very few houses in London which has itself succeeded in becoming one of the true sources of fashion in its own department, for it not only introduces, but it successfully anticipates and originates fashions. As a result of this, the house actually has selling branches in Paris and Berlin, which is something of an innovation for an English house. Most of the firm's goods are made in their factories in England and on the continent, but chiefly in London.

THE TORONTO YARN SPINNING CO.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Toronto Yarn Spinning Company, Limited, Toronto, with a capital of $100,000, divided into $100 shares. The object of the company is "to manufacture, sell and deal in woolen, worsted, cotton, jute and all varieties of yarn." The incorporators are John A. Murray, merchant; Charles S. Murray, physician; James P. Murray and Frederick B. Hayes, manufacturer, and George B. Perry, accountant, all of Toronto.

WHAT IS HELP WORTH?

A discussion arose in the trade the other day as to what a man was worth. A woman applied to a well-known manufacturing house in the ladies' wear trade for a position and wanted $20 a week. This was big pay for a woman, though she was an expert, and they discussed it some time before deciding. Some one asked, "What is anyone worth?" One of the bright young men in the concern said that a man from his chin down was not worth more than $2.50 a day, but from his chin up his value could not be measured. Some men are not worth $1 a day. The president of the Canadian Pacific is supposed to get a salary of $50,000 a year, and he is worth every cent.

Mr. Carnegie made a five-year contract with C. M. Schwab, the steel king, at a million dollars a year. Mr. Carnegie felt that he had the best of the bargain. Within two years the United States Steel Corporation was formed and the Board of Directors wanted to retain Mr. Schwab at this salary. Mr. Schwab refused, it was not enough, and made them a proposition of $200,000 a year and one-quarter of one per cent. of the profits. On this basis his income came to nearly four millions a year. Successful men use their heads more than their hands or feet.

Why "Paquet Furs" Stay Sold

THAT is the vital question! Why DO they give such uniform satisfaction? Why is it that the Fur man can always feel safe when he knows the garment he has just sold was make in the Paquet Factory? We'll tell you.

Paquet Furs are selected by experts—are bought in the raw by men who know their business. They are dressed in the great basement of the Largest Fur Factory in Canada, under the supervision of trained specialists. Then they are dyed in the immense dyeing tanks—this operation taking several days in many instances, and are dried in rapidly-revolving cylinders in an incredibly short space of time. When dry, the inspectors get in their fine work, and woe betide the skin that doesn't come up to the Paquet standard.

The perfect skins are sent upstairs to the cutting room, where they are stretched, cut and passed along to the operators, who know how to put the edges together so they can't come apart, and so neatly that the join cannot be located except from the back. After another searching inspection by the most highly-trained experts in the country, they are sent to the finishing room, there to receive the padding and lining—and after a final examination are ready for the Order Department, where sharp-eyed inspectors stand ready to reject any and every Fur Piece and Fur Garment that falls short of absolute perfection.

Is it any wonder that Paquet Furs are the standard from coast to coast?

If you are not now on our visiting list, drop us a line and you'll be on immediately.

THE CANADIAN FUR TRADE

Retail Business opens well—Prices still higher for Desirable Furs—Good Sorting Orders Arriving Daily—General Review of the Situation.

The heavy advances in furs have been so widely commented upon, and have kept furs so much before the buying public, that they ,may almost be said to have formed an entra inducement this season. At any rate, they have not deterred the general public from buying. The retail trade has begun early, and gives every evidence of being brisk. Weather conditions at the time of writing are just right to open up one of the best fur seasons ever recorded. The tourist trade in the larger cities is particularly good, and furriers, by well-dressed windows and beautiful show room displays, are laying themselves out to do all the trade possible. There are furs, of course, whose prices prohibit their sale to any but the exclusive trade ; but, thanks mainly to the perfection to which the dyeing and blending of skins has been brought, there are plenty of attractive furs available for the general trade, furs whose good-wearing qualities are not at all impaired by the blending and dyeing process to which they are subjected.

Fur Jacket Styles.

Among some of the retail furriers, the call is for better grade goods. The popular fur jackets for ladies, in the better class trade, are seal and Persian lamb, in various styles, of which the most popular are tight-fitting back and box front, and pony styles. Although last season a large number of Persian lamb sacques were sold, with different trimmings, such as mink, Alaska sable, etc., the feeling this year is running more in favor of plain trimmings, similar to the body of the fur. A large number of both natural and dyed pony coats are being sold this season. These coats are chiefly sold for automobiling purposes, as the "pony" is manufactured from a very strong leather, very durable and warm. This line is also shown in three-quarter lengths, with a semi-fitting back, made from caracul, the coats being chiefly trimmed with black and silver lynx. Both of these combinations are very effective.

The staple articles for men's wear, such as raccoon coats, are expected to be as popular as ever. Scotch tweed coats, lined and trimmed with the different furs, such as our Canadian muskrat, raccoon, etc., are expected to sell freely at retail.

Small Furs in Demand.

In stoles and muffs a big demand is looked for in mink furs, notwithstanding the fact that this fur is extremely high in price. Royal ermine will be as strong as in previous seasons. There also seems to be a demand, among the better class trade, for fine chinchilla scarfs and muffs.

Persian Lamb and Sealskin Situation.

Intending purchasers of both Persian lamb and seal garments are strongly advised to place their orders for these garments as early as possible in the season. Reports now being received by the leading furriers in Canada are to the effect that Persians, especially, will be even higher for next Fall's business. Further, the high prices will also affect the latter end of this year's business. Though the supply of Persian lamb does not appear to diminish, there has been such a demand from other countries, for instance, Russia, for this article that prices have advanced fully fifteen per cent. over figures ruling one year ago. Further, prices are expected to remain very firm for some time to come. In sealskins, though there has not been a very great advance during the past year, exporters look for very much higher prices in the coming December sales, when the skins will be sold by public auction in London.

The fur market in its present state will be a very interesting market to watch and follow for the next few years, as the demand for fine furs is a steadily increasing one, and under these conditions the market is bound to be, as at present, a high one.

In Wholesale Circles.

Most of the wholesale furriers and manufacturers have completed shipments. Some are still busy completing the season's orders. A few cold days, as at present writing, have served to boom matters considerably, and give some assurance of a cold Winter and a record trade. Manufacturers expect good assorting orders, and already the sorting trade is showing signs of activity. The demand is for better class goods in all furs. Hurry-up orders are Fur-lined Garments Strong.

Shown by B. Silver & Co., Montreal.
Plate Designed and Engraved by The Toronto Engraving Co.

Manufacturers state the demand for ladies' fur-lined coats is better than ever. The feeling for rat linings, with Alaska sable and mink collars, was never better.

The demand for better grade goods this season is particularly noticeable, while the feeling for cheaper goods, apparently, is dragging. The most popular line for the season is the 48-inch coat. At present the styles vary. One merchants asks for semi-fitting, while another demands a very full, loose coat. There is very little feeling about the trade for tight-fitting coats, for this style has proved very unsatisfactory in the past, as regards durability.

Men's fur-lined coats, trimmed with otter and Persian lamb and lined with muskrat, are to the fore. Men's coon coats are as popular as ever. These two lines seem to be ousting everything else out of the market in men's garments.

Latest cable reports from Irbit, in Siberia, state that all lining furs show a very stiff advance in price. The latest mails from Russia agree with the cablegrams received from the Nijni Kermesse, which stated that Persian lamb skins were even firmer than last year's high prices.

Fur Catalogues

A. J. ALEXANDOR.

A very unique catalogue is that of A. J. Alexandor, 504-506, St. Paul street, Montreal. This catalogue is, without doubt, one of the most sensible yet issued to the trade. The cuts show styles of a reasonable nature, which can be manufactured. In this way the catalogue is useful to the merchant in securing special orders and in giving his own repeat orders. A price list is sent with this catalogue, which gives some idea of the variety of the line manufactured by this firm. The catalogue is about 9x5, and contains twelve pages. The cover is particularly artistic. The halftones illustrate ladies' fur coats and jackets, men's fur-lined coats, caps, collars, etc., as well as many lines of ladies' fur-lined neckwear and muffs. One will be gladly sent on request.

THE REDMOND CO.

The Redmond Co., Ltd., Montreal and Winnipeg, have surpassed all previous efforts in their fur catalogue for the season 1907-1908. It will aid materially in completing sales at retail, and retailers should not delay in securing a copy, of course, mentioning The Review. The catalogue is printed on heavy coated paper, which shows to the best advantage. The cover design is entirely unique, showing a lady with a fancy muff and ruff, and also a cut of this firm's building. The back cover contains their well-known trade mark.

Eighteen pages are given over to exact reproductions of their complete lines of fur jackets, while the following pages show the various new ideas in stoles, neckwear and muffs. The last few pages of the catalogue are occupied by men's fur coats, of all descriptions, also collars and caps. A price list will be sent for the asking.

JOHN EDGAR & CO.

John Edgar & Co., Montreal, have issued an attractive catalogue, which is a credit to the firm. It is in book form, containing twenty-eight pages of finely-finished paper, with cuts illustrating the latest models. At the foot of each page is a brief description of the various garments. A well chosen variety of jackets, ladies' fur-lined coats, stoles, fur neckwear, muffs, children's furs, caps, men's fur-lined coats and fur coats, all clearly shown in the colored half-tone engravings, complete a very artistic catalogue. The cover has a white background, on which is printed a beautiful lady well wrapped up in a loose fur jacket. The back cover contains this firm's brand; namely, the head of a lion. Requests for copies will be promptly attended to on mention of The Review.

B. SILVER & CO.

B. Silver & Co., Montreal, have issued a catalogue for 1907-08, which compares favorably with any The Review has seen. The attractive cover, in blue and white, has a front illustration of a young lady in a Persian lamb jacket, while the back cover is occupied by a cut of the firm's seal trade mark. The catalogue, size, 8x4½, containing 28 pages, is very neatly gotten up. The first part is given over to fur jackets in a number of varieties. These are followed by three or four pages of small pieces, comprising a range of stoles and neck pieces in every conceivable fur. The last pages of the catalogue are given over to men's fur-lined coats, men's collars and children's fur coats. The printing is all that could be desired, and the cuts are clear. Explanations are to the point, and the numbering is explicit. In case retailers have not received a copy an application to the firm, B. Silver & Co., 420 St. Paul St., Montreal, mentioning The Review, will receive prompt attention.

FUR NOTES.

L. Frischling, of The North-Western Fur Co., Limited, Montreal, has returned from an extended European trip. He visited the fur markets in Russia and also Leipzic. Mr. Frischling speaks of the continued high tone of Persian lamb, squirrel furs, etc.

I. Rose, of A. Kirschberg & Co., Montreal, is again in the city, after his usual foreign buying trip. Persians, according to Mr. Rose, are very high in price, with a good demand for this fur all the world over. Squirrel marmot and gray Burgarian lamb are also much in demand, with prices very firm. While away he visited friends in St. Petersburg.

JAPAN AND THE SILK TRADE.

Dry Goods Guide: If there is any one thing certain under the sun it is that if you hear it in Japan it is not so. This fact is so well established in the minds of the silk trade of America that all news from the Yokohama silk exchange is now discounted twice over. Consequently, the reports of the current month of "great excitement, high prices," etc., etc., etc., which the cables brought us from Yokohama as representing the daily condition of the silk market, have been received here with a wink of the other eye and the buyers continue to sit tight. That this course is having its legitimate effect and that the speculators in Japan are beginning to weaken in consequence is shown in the following which we quote from the last market letter of Yve. Guerin et Fils:

> The lack of buyers on the Yokohama market induced the reelers to put down the prohibitive but nominal prices they were asking lately; tram stock has been the worse affected, Sinshiu No. 1 13-15 being reduced from 1315 to 1245 yen. Best grades which are still under contract keep firmer.

There is nothing in the situation as we go to press to warrant any change in policy on the part of American silk manufacturers.

Sufficient unto the day should be the keynote of their transactions in Jap raw silks until the situation both abroad and here changes materially. The strike, which is still on in the silk throwing plants of the country, renders this an easy road to follow.

Housefurnishings and Decorations

From among many elegant fabrics for decoration, shown by Lee, Behrens & Co., of London, England, two specimens of old chinz are illustrated in this issue. Both designs are produced in cretonne, 6-4 linen and chintz, glazed and dull. P6257 is a large old English pattern of a century ago, while the basket design (P6667) rel presents a somewhat later period. Both are now reproduced in several colorings on both white and cream ground, and they are amongst the leaders in the season's most-sought-for patterns.

P6667.

Spring Carpet Trade

Advance Order Business Satisfactory—Fall Demand Active—Prices Are Firm.

Active Fall business is general, and the benefit of repeat orders placed is already being felt. Wilton and Brussels carpets, in a wide range of colorings and patterns, are in active demand. Axminsters are very strong for city trade, and velvets are also picking up. At the present writing greens, in various shades, are leaders, while self-colorings are much admired as well. Reds are gaining ground, and are doing a fair amount of business. Blues are rather slow movers. The feeling for wood shades, chintzes and fawns is better than ever. These latter shades are mostly asked for in high-priced goods. Carpets retailing at one dollar and a half and over are more prominent than before, and stores which formerly would not pay the price have awakened to the fact that the quality business in their towns is theirs if they have the goods.

Most retailers state that Fall deliveries could not have been better. Prices are firm.

.P6257.

Both jobbers and manufacturers report an active advance order business from the Spring lines now being shown the trade. At present most travelers are on the road and are showing a better and larger range than ever. Canadian manufacturers have experienced a successful Fall season, and the splendid patterns and colors they have shown of late have done much to promote increased interest in high-grade Brussels and Wilton carpets, which are everywhere regarded as popular favorites. Ingrains, in the cheaper qualities, are also in strong request.

Colors largely bought for Spring, 1908, business are, greens and light, delicate chintz effects. Wood shades, also, are still in demand. Light colorings and fawn shades continue to hold first position in the better class goods. Self-colors, judging from the samples shown, are as popular as ever, and the two-tone effects are also in high favor. Scroll and floral designs are largely in evidence. Patterns of Oriental effects, for general purposes, are to the front. These designs are especially suitable for dining, sitting and smoking rooms. The small, neat designs, suitable for bedroom purposes, show a marked improvement, as there are many exclusive effects. Plain Wiltons and plain Axminsters, while only shown in a few colors, are quite prominent. Wool carpets, in a cheaper grade, are selling well in three-quarter goods. Tapestries, while much higher in price than previous seasons, are to the fore.

Prices still continue very firm, and the general advance from last year will aggregate nearly ten per cent. throughout the range. At present, there seems no prospect of any lower figures for some time to come, due to the continued scarcity of carpet yarns and high price of skilled labor, but as a result of general prosperous conditions throughout Canada, this fact has not deterred buyers, and the general feeling for better goods has been well maintained.

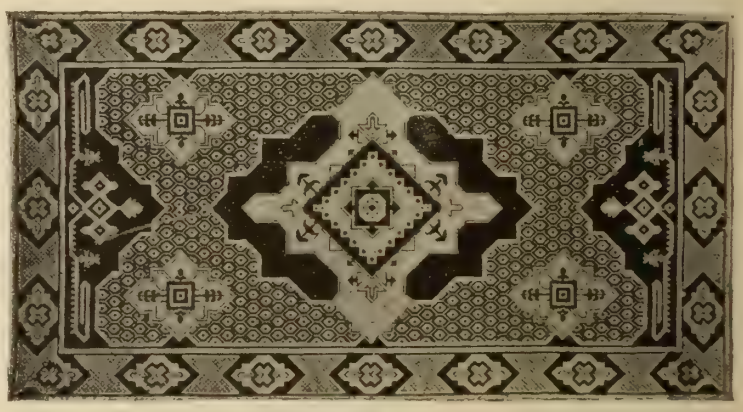
Rugs Strong

Indications Point to An Exceptionally Good Season—Some New Lines That Are Shown.

There is a brisk demand for rugs, and it is expected that the season will be an exceptionally good one. The large varieties shown run from the cheap Smyrnas to most elaborate Orientals and Persians. Colors this year correspond and harmonize with three-quarter piece goods.

A new rug shown this season is of Scotch wool manufacture. It is quite a feature in the Fall showing. Some pretty twotone effects are in vogue. Plain wool rugs, also new, are shown in a variety of plain colors. Prices continue firm, as in carpets.

BETTER STYLES THAN EVER.



Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. Limited, announce that they have passed into stock considerably earlier than usual many new lines of their own manufacture, as well as imported goods. These goods were originally intended for next Spring's business, but owing to their early arrival at the firm's warehouses, can be shipped at any time. The lot includes furniture coverings, tapestry curtains, lace curtains, table covers, etc. The styles are better than ever before. They are showing an immense range of cushion tops, all new styles and mostly from French looms. The firm recently started a new department in novelty lace curtains, and the demand for the goods has proved so great that arrangements are being made to increase the output. Another new line that this firm is now manufacturing is denims, of which they are producing a large variety. The four western travelers of this firm are now covering their ground in these provinces.

Oilcloth and Linoleums

Spring, 1908, Lines—Many New Designs and Colorings—Prices Firm and Deliveries Expected to be Good.

New lines are again engaging the attention of the trade in the linoleum and floor oilcloth field, and designs and colorings have many additions. Floral effects in oilcloths are, perhaps, more prominent than ever before, and the fact that they are used for bedroom purposes by many people explains this tendency. Tile patterns for halls, bathroom and kitchen are only in fair demand. Linoleums are in high favor at present. Neat patterns are doing the business. Retailers can secure good quality linoleum for 29 cents to 63 cents. Inlaid patterns simulate every conceivable carpet design, and are also made to resemble many hardwood floor effects. Large city stores, generally, show these lines by means of pattern books, which certainly facilitates selections and saves a great deal of time and trouble. This method is commendable, especially where a large range is stocked.

Prices continue firm, and deliveries, generally speaking always on time, are expected to continue so for Spring.

Wall Paper Development

The Progress Made by Canadian Manufacturers—They Now Turn Out Lines to Meet the Most Cultured Demand.

In the minds of a large number of buyers, the word "imported" often carries a great deal more significance than it is entitled to. Years ago, perhaps, this idea in the mind of the Canadian wall paper consumer was excusable. In those days Canada was looked upon, by foreigners and by natives alike, as just a mere colony—an outpost of the empire—dependent for all marks of culture upon other countries. Few but the most far-sighted statesmen could peer into the future and see Canada the Colony evolving into Canada the Nation.

Such an evolution has, however, partly taken place, while the evolution into nationhood is still going on apace. This fact is discernible in more than one direction. Distinct Canadianism is easily traceable in much of the work of modern Canadian artists and men of letters. In manufacturing circles particularly we are developing along national lines. People are beginning to realize that raw materials can be turned into finished products here in Canada to suit the most cultured demand.

CAPACITY, 60,000 ROLLS PER DAY MONTREAL

In wall paper manufacturing we can hardly boast yet that we produce distinctly Canadian designs. We are influenced a good deal in this direction by the United States. But, as far as the manufacturing end of the industry is concerned, we need have no fear of the competition of the imported article.

"Watch us Grow" is the motto of many a new western prairie town. The same motto might be used by many Canadian manufacturers of wall paper. For the past few years this industry has been keeping pace with the advancement of the nation generally. Plants have been greatly extended and workmen of the highest skill obtained, with the natural result of an output of the first quality and the most extensive variety. The talent of the best designers of the day is called into play every year by Canadian manufacturers and no effort is spared to make the most of every design in the process of manufacturing.

As far as wall paper is concerned, the word "imported" will carry no guarantee of superiority over the domestic article in the mind of the discerning buyer of the present day. Just show the consuming public the lines of wall paper turned out by our domestic manufacturers, and there will be no need to haul out the "imported" article.

MARSHALL FIELD & CO. OPPOSE PARCELS POST.

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, recently sent out rather a lengthy letter to their customers in regard to the ill effects of a parcels post law. Since this letter has been circulated, many Chicago show houses have adopted a like policy, and it is anticipated that influence will be brought to bear on the Congressmen. Following is the letter of Marshall Field & Co.:

"Recent reports from Washington indicate that at the next session of Congress, in December, a determined effort will be made to secure the passage of a bill, providing for some system of parcels post. It is also suggested that each political party, believing that such legislation should be popular on the eve of a presidential election, will thus bid for public favor. This subject is of such vital importance that we feel constrained to urge each one to work diligently in order to prevent the enactment of a law on this subject. No doubt your work in this direction last year prevented the passage of a parcels post bill.

"A conclusive argument against such a law is found in the fact that a parcels post system would produce a large annual deficit. Postal matter of this class is now carried at a loss. With a parcels post law, it would be necessary to enlarge post offices, add new employes and equipe the rural carrier with an express wagon. And why should this loss be incurred in order to benefit one class at the expense of another? We would suggest that during the next few months, while your Congressmen are at home, you call their attention to the importance of this subject, and urge them to oppose such legislation as being a benefit to the mail order house at the expense of the local merchant. If you desire to reinforce your arguments with a petition to be presented to them later, we will be glad to forward blanks for that purpose. Very truly yours—Marshall Field & Co."

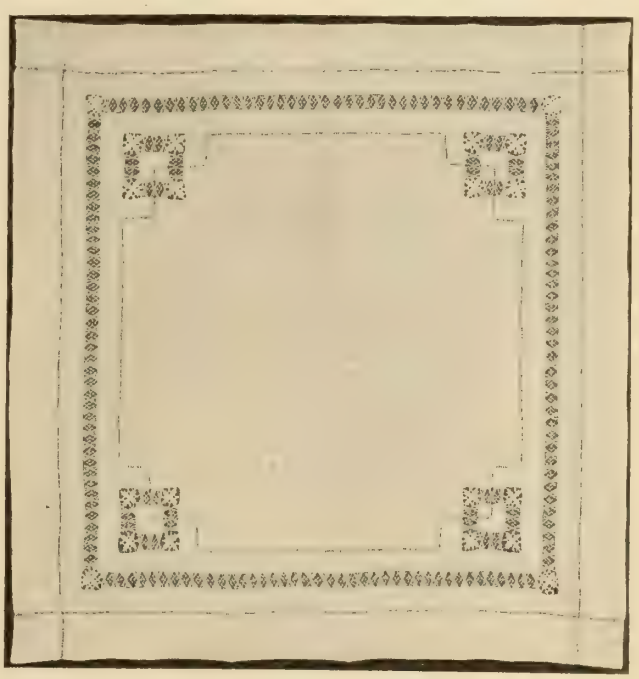
STAPLES AND RAW MATERIALS

Outlook For Spring—Some Mills Overworked—Good Fall Trade—Wool Values.

The outlook for spring, 1908, is fairly bright, but owing to the tightness of money and the cool season experienced this year, there will be a disposition on the part of retailers to buy more carefully than for the last season or so. The feeling of the trade, generally, is that any tendency toward lower prices will not benefit the purchaser for many months to come. Further, the general cotton prices may advance very sharply if expectations are realized, namely, that heavy purchases will be made for the East, owing to stocks being very light in all the Eastern countries. This is sure to prove a stronger factor in advancing prices for the coming season, notwithstanding any slight reductions which may occur in the price of raw cotton, owing to a very favorable crop.

Travelers Out for Spring.



Towards the end of last month travelers were out on sorting trips. At present, in some cases, they are already out with Spring sample lines, although some houses are waiting until later in the month before showing. Samples of prints and a fine range of fancy cotton lines are being displayed. There can be no doubt that there will be a fair business transacted once trade begins in earnest. Jobbers state that samples have been as early as usual, and all are looking for a record season, notwithstanding drawbacks.

Advisable to Order Early.

There are a great many in the trade who never care to place good-sized orders early, but who prefer, rather, to wait until they see whether or not anything is going to happen. Sometimes, no doubt, this is a good idea, but in the matter of staples this year it is advisable that the merchant place his orders early. Naturally, there is no need for reckless buying, nor do we advise plunging, but the wise buyer will order such goods as he is reasonably sure he will need, at once, not putting the matter off indefinitely. A great many feel that there is really no necessity for haste. Neither is there, but it is better to be on the safe side through buying early than to be unable to secure goods when they are most required. Further, it is safe to assume this season that the staple lines will not be any lower. Also through delay, the merchant loses another advantage: he is not able to get the pick of patterns, as is the buyer who sees the first line of samples shown. Most of the large houses contracted for their print cloths many months ago, this when prices were very much easier. As a consequence, they will be obliged, in most cases, to advise as sold out, to their travelers, many of the most desirable patterns as soon as first purchases are exhausted.

Mills Are All Busy.

All the mills are very busy. Many of them are booked up to April and some much beyond that date. At present mills are finishing up Fall stuff and commencing on Spring goods.

So far, the possibilities are that deliveries will be slightly better than last year, as manufacturers are somewhat better prepared, but not to any very great extent.

Manufacturers report purchases in all wholesale houses much in excess of former seasons, in spite of which fact it is confidently expected that staple stocks will be light in November, when he greater portion of the wholesale trade takes stock. This being the case, new prices will be put in force for Spring, which will be materially higher than those asked for present delivery. In many cases, it will mean that lines which were retailed for 10c. will go up to the 2-yards-for-25c. basis.

General Fall Trade Good.

Canadian mills have experienced a good fall trade. All lines sold well from the beginning.

In the jobbing trade, there are very few who are not satisfied with the amount of trade done during the Fall season. Both wrapperettes and flannelettes sold well, while other lines were in proportion.

Dress Gingham Price List.

Dress ginghams for 1908 show practically the same values as a year ago. Staple and fancy patterns show some improvements. In order to avoid slow deliveries of the past season, jobbers are ordering freely. Some pretty new effects are shown, and these goods are manufactured by the Canadian Colored Cotton Mills. Wool Values

A few months ago The Review gave voice to the opinion that, for some time at least, merchants would have to revise their preconceived ideas as to the basis of values; they would have to recognize that all dry goods values were now fixed at a much higher level. That this view is a right one, the whole tendency of the present markets for raw materials proves.

Take, for instance, the course of the Bradford top market, which, after all, is only that of raw wool which has advanced a stage in the process of manufacture. Tops, as the following table will show, are now practically at the same level as twelve months ago:

Bradford Tops.

1906	60's Super. d.	46's Med. xb. d.	40's Coarse xb. d.

June 28	28	18	16¾

Super 60's, it will be seen, are exactly the same price they were a year ago.

In August and September last year an attempt was made to force down the prices of merino wools. Those who engineered this movement are said to have lost heavily through their unsuccessful efforts to sway the market. In October and November a similar attempt was made to "bear" the New Zealand market for cross-breds. This also resulted disastrously, and the old figures again ruled. Cross-breds, however, particularly those of a low grade, are manifesting somewhat of a downward tendency, and it looks as though now that merinos are becoming plentiful, materials made from fine wools will gradually regain their old standing.

Regarding the crop outlook for the season of 1907-08, the Textile Mercury says:

"It is regarded as a foregone conclusion that the wool supply for the year upon which we have just entered will be somewhat larger than that of season 1906-07. Queensland flockmasters are adding greatly to their flocks, and in South Australia and parts of Victoria a good season has been enjoyed. In New South Wales the season has been patchy; good generally over the northern districts, and bad in the southern parts of the state. It is unlikely, therefore, that the increase in the forthcoming clip will be anything like as large as that of last year, especially as it is not expected that New Zealand will turn out any more wool than in 1906-07. At the present time it looks as if an increase of 130,000 bales might be expected in the ensuing Australasian clip, but a good deal will depend upon the weather during the next few months, while shearing is in progress. A proportion of the increase this last year was due to many flocks being shorn with more than twelve months' growth of wool, owing to the late shearing, and something of the same kind may take place again this year if the Spring and early Summer turn out wet.

Will the larger quantity of wool be absorbed with ease, and without any reduction in values? That is the question growers are asking just now, and so far as can be seen at present there is no reason why they should receive a discouraging answer. Consumption is going on at an enormous rate, and there are no indications of any contraction being likely in the near future. The situation is a strong one as regards raw material, for it is expected that stocks of merino will be down to zero again in the industrial centres by the end of the year. The trade has prospered of late from end to end, and buyers may therefore be expected to be in good form when the wool season comes around once more. The outlook for the near future is consequently highly encouraging."

SATEEN RAYEE 11½ CENTS.

Owing to a printer's error in Spring price lists of the Dominion Textile Co., published in the September issue, sateen rayee, one of the specialties of the Magog lines, was quoted at 9c. This should have been 11½c. This cloth is proving an active seller.

Spring Cotton Goods

¶ The Dominion Textile Company have produced for the spring of 1908, easily the largest and most varied range of printed cotton goods in the history of Canadian textiles.

¶ Many novelty cotton fabrics combining the style and color combinations of more expensive cloths are shown. Durability and permanency of colors are more than mere advertising rhetoric.

¶ Values will appeal to the retail trade and the consuming public.

¶ All goods are attractively folded.

Samples are now in jobbers' hands, and in your own interest, order early.

Is Your Underwear Department a Drag or a Boost ?

YOUR UNDERWEAR DEPARTMENT can bring and hold customers to your store or it can "shoo" them away. It all depends on the underwear. A man will wear gloves that don't fit him, and a woman will wear shoes that are too tight, and in most cases go back to the same store with their next order. But underwear ! If it doesn't give them the exact comfort they are looking for they blame the store they bought it from and make their future purchases elsewhere. Pen-Angle Underwear has a reputation for building business—and there are reasons for it. Pen-Angle Underwear fits perfectly, never shrinks, is comfortable to the skin, wears and washes well. It's the kind of underwear that brings customers back for more of the same.

Men's Furnisher and Clothier

THE PERSONAL ELEMENT IN RETAIL TRADE

"I don't know anything about silks. But I'll wager that I could go into Black's store, learn the names and qualities of silks, and in a week sell as many silk goods as any man behind the counter. I know customers."

The gentleman who made this remark has been notably successful in life. He made the wager to illustrate the value of the personal element in business. He knows human nature. It has won him success in his business, and he has had to handle many men, and, also, to meet and do business with leading business men all over the country.

To reduce his idea to everyday practice, let two illustrations of salesmanship from everyday store life be considered.

A customer went into one store the other day for a belt. He asked for "a leather belt."

"Something about $1 ?" said the clerk, reaching for a box, and displaying several belts in it.

"I'm looking for a gun metal belt," answered the customer.

The clerk looked through his belt stock, couldn't find a gun metal belt, and offered a black seal belt, and a tan belt, but neither satisfied the customer, and no sale was made.

The same customer went into another store, and asked for "a leather belt."

"What style would you like ? We have several varieties," said the clerk, showing him to a belt ring, on which a stock of perhaps 100 belts, of many different patterns, were displayed.

"A gun metal belt," replied the customer.

The clerk searched for one, and not finding it, took a quick glance at his customer's suit, and exclaimed, "Here is a belt that will look well with your suit. I do not happen to find a gun metal belt. Lift your coat and try this one on."

The salesman held the belt a moment for the customer's inspection, and then fastened it around the customer's waist. It satisfied.

Then the customer asked the price.

"One dollar," answered the clerk. Then the clerk, as he registered the sale, recommended invisible suspenders for Summer wear, because they made a man feel so well put together.

It is evident that the second clerk was the better salesman, because he made the sale. He sized up his customer. In other words he knew how to handle him, so as to please him. The first salesman merely suggested to his customers the idea of price. "One dollar for a belt," was the idea that he conveyed to the customer's mind. The second salesman impressed the customer that he had a belt that would look well on him, even though it was not the belt called for.

He suggested to the customer something that would improve his personal appearance, and, by keeping the price in the background, he required the customer to ask the cost. He followed up his suggestion of improving the customer's personal appearance by recommending invisible suspenders, and thereby he created an opportunity for a second sale.

In the two above cases, the personal ability was the big factor. Neither salesman had the goods called for. But one salesman made a sale, while the other failed. Anybody can sell goods that are called for if he has them. Even a nickel-in-the-slot machine can do that. But it takes ability to sell something that is not called for, and it is this ability that is building up business today. Selling goods that are not called for does not mean the working off of goods. A customer who is sold goods that he appreciates becomes a good customer. The customer who is worked is sooner or later worked once too often, and he becomes an enemy.

If a salesman studies human nature, or the personality of his customers, he learns many ways to sell goods. Most every customer has his, or her, hobby, fad or peculiarity. By understanding these qualities, the salesman often finds an open road to good sales.

Customers may be divided into two classes—one, the class that demands goods of quality—the other, the class that demands goods for a price. Salesmen who are successful early learn to discriminate between these classes. A person who seeks goods of quality wants to be pleased first, and then asks the price. A person who wants goods at a price asks the price first, and then is pleased afterwards. The person who wants to be pleased has money to satisfy his desires. The person who wants goods at a price must limit his desires to his purse.

The teachers of salesmanship claim that the salesman should first get the interest of his customer in his goods, and should make the price a secondary consideration, to be brought up after the customer has decided to take the goods. This rule applies well to persons who wish to be pleased. But the great mass of shoppers are after goods that will fit their purse. Not many of them admit it, however. Even well-to-do people buy as closely as possible on each article they desire, so that they may get as many articles as possible.

The clerk must rely on his knowledge of human nature to tell him whether his customer has come in for goods of quality, or at a price. If he is not sure of the classification of his customers he should ask leading questions diplomatically. The display of a few goods, with fitting remarks, often brings from the customer a few words which exactly places him or her. It is usually a good rule to presume that the customer wants the best there is, for it is human nature to want the best. It is usually a mistake to bring up the price first. No person wants to see his money disappear without knowing what is coming back to him. If he, or she, is interested in goods, he, or she, is often eager to exchange money for the goods. Prices are best presented to customers in advertisements, or on price tags. It is the task of the salesman to talk quality.

If a salesman observes his customers, he will find that a particular feature in a line of goods appeals to each individual. Take a line of neckwear, for example. Show it to six men. One will admire the silk. Another will be pleased with the style, or shape. Another will criticize the design. Still another will question the price. And still another will ask if it is easy to fasten. The sixth man will try to match his costume.

This is human nature at work. The particular features appeal to the individuality of the men. It is the same throughout retail trade. If all people liked the same kind of goods, a great many clerks would be digging potatoes down on the farm to-day. The clerk has got to cater to the individuality of his customers, and to cater to it, he must understand it. He must realize what particular feature of an article interests his customer, and then tell him about it.

Some customers like to be taken, too, and told how good the article is which they are purchasing. Other customers hate talking salemen as the average man hates a talking barber. A clerk has got to know to whom to talk, and to whom not to talk, in order to make friends.

The clerk, in order to talk properly, must know what to talk about. He must know his customer. A Boston wholesale merchant has in force a rule, which, in his opinion, should be in force in retail stores of the country. It is, "Learn the name and address of your customer." This merchant meets many buyers from all parts of the country in the course of a year. His first question is not, "What do you want?" He asks, "How are you, who are you, and where do you come from?" He doesn't open up a business conversation by asking what goods the customer is carrying. He asks him how trade is in his section of the country. In many cases he asks for the visitor's family and friends, for he used to be a salesman, and on the road he took a personal interest in his customers. He requires his salesmen to do likewise to-day.

This wholesaler, by the way, is as shrewd and as observant of men, as is Hon. John D. Long, former governor of Massachusetts. When Mr. Long was campaigning, a few years ago, he stopped at a cattle show. A farmer greeted him. The governor ran off his questions in this order:

"How are you?"

"Fine," answered the farmer.

"And your family?"

"Never was better," replied the farmer, delighted that Mr. Long should remember his family.

"And that white horse of yours; how's he getting along now?"

"Good Lord, Mr. Long, do you remember that old white horse?" exclaimed the farmer. "What a memory you must have."

After the farmer left, Mr. Long's companion looked at him and exclaimed, "How in the world did you know anything about that fellow's white horse?"

"Why, didn't you notice the white horsehairs on his clothing?" replied Mr. Long.

No person can conceal all evidences of their occupations, fads or peculiarities. The observant clerk must find, if he looks, some opening to the personality of the customer. Once he begins to develop personal interest between himself and his customer, he begins to create confidence. And when he has the confidence of his customer he has his trade. A very successful business man said the other day: "I've got my competitors beaten because I have the confidence of my customers."—The Apparel Retailer.

Shirts and Collars

Bright Colors in Shirts Expected to Be Leaders—The Review Does Not Agree With This.

It is stated that pronounced colors in shirts will have a big call next Spring. The Review is inclined to doubt it. For one thing, brighter shirt materials will mean quieter shades in nerkwear, whereas, in the latter case, the tendency is exactly in the opposite direction. Livelier neckwear is about due, and to make it possible, shirtings would have to be of the quiet order. However, apart from this consideration, it seems certain that the neat, unobtrusive effects will predominate. In New York the leading colors are expected to be blues, tans, corns, greens, some greys, lavenders and pinks. Blues, tans and corns are the most active sellers at present.

The pleated bosom for dress occasions is becoming stronger. Quite a number were worn here last season and the season before, but there will be many more this year. In reference to this a New York paper says:—"With the comparatively insignificant place that bosom shirts will have in Autumn and Winter stocks, it is significant that pleated garments are in higher esteem than ever. It ought to be understood, though, that men who are particular about their dress are disappointed with purchases when they find a decided proneness to crumple after a few hours' wear. The only safeguard is to sell to such the kind having but little plain space in front. Our laundries are not disposed to be liberal in their application of starch, and unless the pleats be close together, the plain part will muss quickly, with most unsightly results. In a word, the more solid the front, the less will it lose its shape."

Neckwear

Colors Are Richer, but at the Same Time Not Loud—Higher-priced Lines for Holiday Trade.

While the Fall neckwear contains few bright colors, the materials have, generally speaking, more life in them than the Spring lines. The aim has been to produce richer-looking goods, without breaking into the loud shades, and manufacturers have been very successful. The attractiveness of the showing has been strongly appreciated already by the consumer, as evidenced by the active retail business done.

Reds and greens are the leaders. The Review prophesied some time ago that they would be. Brown was spoken of as the big feature this season, but it was not reasonable to expect that it would come up to expectations, although fair sales have been made.

The folded-end derby appears to be a favorite shape. The general width is two and a half inches.

The range of materials includes grain silk, with quarter-inch satin stripe, in contrasting colors, running

The Review has impressed upon its readers, time and time again, the desirability of selling better lines, as they can certainly do if they try. The holiday trade should offer an excellent opportunity for handling higher grade goods than ever before.

COMPULSORY BOOK-KEEPING.

Our recent leading article on compulsory book-keeping has this week elicited a very interesting letter from a reader, says Men's Wear. He points out that, owing to his method of book-keeping, he was able to trace a loss of £55, but that he could not, except by a shrewd surmise, ascertain how the leakage had occurred. It is pretty clear that the loss might have continued to accumulate by degrees until our correspondent found himself in the Bankruptcy Court. He was saved this ignominy by his knowledge of scientific accountancy. The point to be borne in mind is that a successful trader may incur losses through the dishonesty of an employe, and that the embezzlement may be so skilfully carried out that the trader may erroneously ascribe his losses to bad trade, unless he keeps books to show him in time that there is a leakage somewhere, and that that leakage is not due to ordinary trade losses. One often reads of cases in the criminal courts where dishonest employes have been shown to have carried out an extensive system of embezzlement over many years. They have so manipulated the books that it has been only by a chance that their nefarious practices have been ultimately discovered. One wonders as one reads these cases that such things are possible. The art of efficient book-keeping is to have a system of checking, so that leakages of this character cannot be concealed for any long period. They should be discovered at their early stages. It may not always be possible to find out exactly how the loss has occurred. Our correspondent could not do so. But he achieved his main object in ascertaining the existence of the loss, and was thus in a position to attempt to remedy it before it had assumed dangerous dimensions.

READY-TO-WEAR CLOTHING.

Fall clothing trade at retail is opening up very nicely, and merchants everywhere are in active competition for business. The demand for ready-to-wear goods is growing rapidly, and The Review has seen a great many departments that pay splendid profits. The aim of every retailer should be to stock the best clothing in the market. If this is done, a lot of trade that now goes to the custom tailors may be attracted. With the advent of really cold weather, business will be very brisk

Views From Various Points

CHATHAM.

Business in dress goods is beginning to brighten up remarkably. The spell of cold weather at the end of September came as a very welcome change to the drygoodsmen, and certainly set the trade in heavy goods moving. Even the first cold day or two, the difference in business was noticeable. Prospects look good for an excellent Fall trade. The crops throughout the country are fair, and the shortage in some lines will be pretty well offset by higher prices. On account of the late cold season in the Spring, and the Summer coming immediately on its heels, the people should have their Winter clothes worn so well that the purchase of new goods will be little short of compulsory. A big Fall trade in dress goods is anticipated all along the line.

An important business change recently took place, in the retirement of C. H. Mills from the firm of Thos. Stone & Son, Mr. Mills' interests being acquired by his partner, Spencer Stone. Since coming here from Berlin, a couple of years ago, Mr. Mills has taken an active part in Board of Trade work, having inaugurated the agitation which resulted in the formation of a Board of Trade a few months ago, of which Mr. Mills was the secretary. Mr. Mills returns to his old home in Berlin, where he has accepted the management of the Berlin Leatherette Co., a new concern recently incorporated. Mr. and Mrs. Mills left for Berlin on Sept. 23rd, the former being presented shortly before his departure by the staff of Thos. Stone & Son with a handsome stein, as a token of appreciation. The firm signalized the occasion of Mr. Mills' departure by a widely-advertised dissolution sale.

Jas. Flynn, for the past twenty-five years a member of the staff of Thos. Stone & Son, has been promoted to the managerial position left vacant by the retirement of C. H. Mills.

Fred. Trudell of the 2 Ts (Trudell & Tobey) originated a unique display in Hamilton recently, with a view to advertising the opening of their new store in the Ambitious City, which event took place Sept. 28. In moving in his new stock, Mr. Trudell loaded it upon ten big Hendrie drays and, with a brass band at the head of the procession, and a galaxy of banners announcing that the stock was that of the new 2 Ts store, paraded the principal streets of the city. The display attracted considerable notice.

Ross Hicklin, for several years past in the employ of Albert Sheldrick, recently purchased the tailoring business of Ross & Sons. His place on Mr. Sheldrick's staff is taken by the latter's son, Challis Sheldrick.

J. W. Webb, who for some years has conducted a tailoring establishment on Fifth street, has removed into more commodious premises on King street, opposite the C.P.R. station.

Will Foreman, of Wm. Foreman & Co., has returned from a vert pleasant two weeks' trip through the Eastern States, in the course of which he took in the principal cities, and the Jamestown Exposition.

H. W. Ball & Co. signalized the close of September by evolving another novelty, in the shape of a harvest home sale. The show windows and store were decorated with sheaves of wheat, ears of corn, cornstalks wirh ears, and big, yellow pumpkins, besides other products appropriate to the harvest season. In the heart of a big agricultural community, these adjuncts proved quite a drawing card, and the sale was a very successful one.

The Fall millinery openings are all over, and the millinery business has started in with a rush. The cold snap led people to realize, in a very practical fashion, the timeliness of Winter hats, and as a result, business is everywhere reported brisk.

The show window of the Foreman store looks like a little Edinburgh or a corner of the Grampians. The display of plaids has proven quite a drawing card, particularly to Scots. The display included on one ledge a fine assortment of plaid silks. On a second ledge was a comprehensive assortment of clan tartans, some twenty-five different clans being represented in the display. A third ledge showed steamer rugs in clan tartan designs.

Alf. Stone, for many years associated in business with his brother, W. M. Stone, opened his new men's furnishing store, on King street, opposite the market, on August 31. He is setting out with the motto of, "Cash, and one price."

Madame Skirving, for some years past head of the dressmaking department of Thos. Stone & Son, this season severed her connection with that firm. She is succeeded by Mrs. V. H. Stevens, formerly in the dressmaking business in Toronto.

The alterations to the interior of Stone & Co.'s men's furnishing store have been practically completed, and more commodious premises are the result, the floor space being extended some sixteen feet.

The tailoring firm of Avichouser & Collins has been dissolved. Mr. Avichouser continuing the business. Mr. Collins has gone to Vermilion, Alta., where he intends to locate. During his two and one-half years' residence here he was a prominent member of the 24th Regiment band, and he will be master of the city band in his new home.

Despite unfavorable weather, the Peninsula Fair this year was first-class, being in every way a credit to the directors. The attendance was, considering the circumstances, quite encouraging. A noteworthy feature was the series of fine displays put on by local merchants in the main exhibition building, every inch of available space being taken.

LONDON.

Wholesale dry goods merchants here report conditions eminently satisfactory and payments pretty good. Trade, they say, is ahead of last year, in spite of the fact that prices are from ten to twenty-five per cent. higher. What is equally gratifying is the fact that the prospects are exceedingly bright. The trade, however, is badly handicapped by the difficulty in getting goods, the situation in this respect showing no improvement over last month. So much buying was done on the spot by merchants attracted to the city by the Western Fair, that travelers are finding it hard to get orders.

W. F. Boughner has got into his new premises on Richmond street, opposite the City Hall, and in addition to his usual stock of hats and men's furnishings, he is now carrying a fine line of manufactured clothing. Mr. Boughner has been very successful since opening up in business in London, his former store on Dundas street, near Richmond, having for years been a fa orite spot with good dressers, and there is reason to believe that in his new quarters the business will still be his, and to a greater extent than ever. One secret of Mr. Boughner's success is that he knows how to dress his window, and never allows the same display to remain too long. By means of frequent changes in this respect, he not only advertises his goods, but keeps the public posted on what is newest in his lines. The stock in his new store is fresh throughout.

Slow progress has up till now been made in the construction work on Smallman & Ingram's big store on Dundas and Richmond streets. The demolition of the old buildings has proven a larger task than was thought it would be, and was only completed a few days ago. In these operations the shoring and making safe adjoining buildings formed no small part. Construction work is now going on in earnest, the foundation being well under way, and there is reason to hope that the first section of the new structure will be completed on schedule time.

ST. JOHN, N.B.

With the advent of colder weather, which causes the people to think of Fall changes, the retailers have been putting seasonable goods to the fore. Heavy dress goods, underwear, jackets, sweaters, furs and other lines in demand at this season of the year, are now on display. The jobbers have sent their travelers out again and business is reported brisk in all lines.

Several of the wholesale houses say that deliveries from the mills are a little better than they were, but there is still much room for improvement. Looking over the stocks of wholesalers, one is surprised to find how well they have succeeded in working out of Summer lines, which were expected to be stickers when the weather went bad. How the retailers have done with these holdings is another question, but judging by the newspapers there have been some heroic efforts made to reduce stock.

The tourist trade this season has been fully up to the mark, despite the weather drawbacks, and the merchants feel quite satisfied with the result.

The Fredericton Exhibition, which was conducted from September 16 to 21, proved a grand success, both for the promoters of the fair and the merchants at the capital. All previous records for attendance were broken.

About the first of September Macauley Bros. & Co. resumed business in that part of their building which was damaged by fire. A number of changes and improvements have been made and the store now presents a very fine appearance. The big window glass has been replaced with lights of a smaller size, and the remaining space has been filled with prisms which carry light to all parts of the store, so that now it is one of the best lighted in the city. Oak cases have been built with dust proof doors and patent ventilators, so that goods placed in the windows will not be hidden by frost even on the coldest day.

John R. Stevens, for several years on the retail staff of Waterbury & Rising, severed his connection with the firm last month and left for Sydney, C.B., to assume the management for J. W. Ingraham & Co. He was presented by his fellow clerks in Waterbury & Rising's with a handsome gold-mounted fountain pen.

On September 10, an interesting case was heard before Justice McLeod in the circuit court at Newcastle. It was an action brought by Mrs. Mary Curtis of Newcastle, against the Sun Insurance Co. The plaintiff sought to recover $2,000 fire insurance. It appears her millinery stock and shop were insured with the defendant company and some months after the insurance was effected the place and stock were burned. The company refused to pay over the insurance money, asserting that the claim was not filed within the proper time; that the value of the stock had been over-estimated at the time of applying for insurance, and that, subsequently, the stock had been materially reduced. The plaintiff contended that the delay in filing the claim was due to the neglect of the company and denied the other allegations.

Arrangements for a settlement were made the following day, Mrs. Curtis receiving $1,000 in settlement.

Scovil Bros. & Co. (Oak Hall) have added two new departments to their business. A special line of girls' man-tailored coats, very neat and stylish, has been placed on sale in the boys' department, and in connection with the men's furnishings department, a line of furs and fur-lined coats has been secured. The addition of these lines tends to keep Oak Hall to the fore in the men's, youths' and misses' outfitting trade. The travelers for this house are now covering the Maritime Provinces with their samples and report business good in all branches.

An immense signboard placed at Boar's Head on the St. John River by the Dunlop, Cooke Co. was recently riddled with bullets and torn down by some miscreants. Detectives are working on the case and a reward of $100 has been offered for the conviction of the guilty parties.

The Board of Trade has received assurances from the department of railways, at Ottawa, that the changes and improvements asked for in the I.C.R. yard here, will be made in time for the coming Winter's business. The contractors have already started work on the new warehouse and a gang of men will shortly be put at work increasing the track facilities in the Gilberts' Lane yard.

The popularity of St. John as the millinery centre of the Maritime Provinces was again clearly demonstrated last month. The three big wholesale millinery houses, Manchester-Robertson-Allison, Brock & Paterson, and The London House Wholesale, held their Fall openings on September 11 and 12, and their showrooms were thronged from morning until night with buyers from all over the provinces. Sales were reported to be fully up to the average, if not somewhat better.

St. John is having quite a building boom. It is estimated that upwards of half a million dollars is represented in the various structures now being erected or about to be built. Chief among these are the new Royal Bank building on King St., adjoining Brock & Paterson's, and the big cold storage warehouse in the north end, each representing a cost of about $125,000. A new Y.M.C.A. building, costing $60,000, a new home for the Seaman's Institute and various business and residential blocks now in process of construction, bring the total well up toward the $500,000 mark.

DUTY ON WOOLLENS.

At the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, the following resolution on the woollen industry was carried:

"Whereas, it has been brought home to the members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that some important branches of the woollen industry of the Dominion have languished during the past ten years, throwing many hundreds of work people out of employment, closing up many factories, and causing serious loss of invested capital;

"And, whereas, the recently enacted tariff has failed to adequately provide for the protection and development of these industries:

"Be it resolved, that it is the opinion of this association, in annual meeting assembled, that the Government of Canada should take immediate steps to fully investigate the needs of these industries and to adopt such tariff measures as will again enable them to develop satisfactorily, and to compete on a fair basis with the products of other countries where the scale of wages and the standard of living are far below that of our work people;

"And be it further resolved, that the Tariff Committee and the Executive Council be hereby instructed to co-operate in every possible way with the Woollen Section in properly presenting its case to the Government for attention."

MR. AND MRS. BROCK'S GOLDEN WEDDING.

On September 23, fifty years ago, W. R. Brock, president of the W. R. Brock Co., and Mrs. Brock, were married in Trinity Church, Toronto. They celebrated their golden anniversary very quietly at their home in Queen's Park. Only members of the family were present. Many letters and telegrams of congratulation were received from personal and business friends in all parts of the Dominion, congratulations in which The Review, and, we are sure, its readers, join most heartily.

DOMINION AND PROVINCIAL EXHIBITION AT SHERBROOKE

In spite of bad weather, the Dominion and Provincial Exhibition, held at Sherbrooke, Que., September 2nd to 14th, by the Eastern Townships Agricultural Association, was a distinct success in every way. In keeping with the added importance this year of the exhibition, the directors made many improvements which were appreciated by the vast throngs. A new Arts Building, a new Dairy Building, and an enlarged and renovated grandstand greeted visitors. The grounds were improved throughout, and large tents accommodated new displays.

The first week was interfered with by steady downpours of rain, but the attendance was good. The opening of the second week was favored with good weather, and the Governor-General's day witnessed the largest paid attendance in the history of the association, over 30,000 passing the turnstiles. The Governor-General and suite, the Lieutenant-Governor, and many of the Dominion and Provincial Ministers visited the Exhibition.

As usual, the Main Building, containing the various industrial displays, was the centre of attraction, as it was here the displays described were. Dry goods merchants undoubtedly profited from their visit to the Exhibition.

Moore Carpet Display.

Former exhibits of the Moore Carpet Co., Ltd., Sherbrooke, at the annual exhibition were surpassed by the display in the Main Building at the Dominion Exhibition this year. All lines manufactured by the firm, such as Sirdar Wilton rugs, Brussels and Wilton carpets, Togo bath rugs, etc., were tastefully arranged. Carpet yarns, attractive "Made-in-Canada" cards, and photos of the mills aided in making an attractive show.

Sirdar Wilton rugs and Togo bath rugs range in size from 18x36 to 36x63, and are active lines.

The background was formed of Princess Wilton rugs in large sizes, exact reproductions of Oriental rugs. Hall runners formed the centre of the exhibit. Togo bath rugs artistically covered the ceiling. Fawns, blues, greens and reds were the main general carpet colors displayed.

This firm have made steady progress since the reopening of the old Dominion Mills, some few years ago. Their reputation for high-class, well-made carpets and rugs is indisputed by the better class of stores in all parts of Canada. Merchants in smaller centres are rapidly realizing that they can sell Wilton and Brussels carpets, and that "Made-in-Canada" goods are satisfactory.

H. A. Moore, of the firm, who will be on the road more than formerly, was in charge of the exhibit.

It is worthy of note that this exhibit was awarded the Birks (Montreal) medal for the best display of manufactured products. When the Governor-General and suite passed through the Main Building, the Moore carpet exhibit claimed a good deal of their attention, and they were much interested in learning of the processes of carpet manufacture.

Splendid Waist Display.

It has remained for the Pearl Mfg. Co., Bromptonville, Que., to show waist manufacturers the way to active co-operation with merchants for the distribution of their waists. The attractive booth of the Pearl Mfg. Co., in the Main Building, was one of the most interesting to lady visitors and merchants. The lady demonstrator, and L. E. Chamberlain, of the firm, had a busy time of it. Direct sales returns for merchants proved the advisability of this unusual method of advertising for waist manufacturers.

A full sample line manufactured by the firm was tastefully arranged on many Palmenberg forms, and in the good cartoons of the concern. T. DeLisle, the experienced designer of the firm, is deserving of praise for the many exclusive styles shown.

Taffeta and Japanese silk waists formed the bulk of the display, with a good sprinkling of all-over laces. Waists—plaid silk designs and tailored styles—had a representation. Short, three-quarter and long-sleeved models were seen, according to the occasion for which the waist was designed. Severe to elaborate fancy styles comprised the range.

The firm was organized only early this year, and already has a good and growing connection. They sell direct to retailers, and have four salesmen. Plenty of good help is available in Bromptonville, and their factory building is modern in every way. Twenty-five additional machines were installed this month. Experienced men in the firm, and plenty of capital, seem to assure the success of this venture. The line will be shown throughout the Dominion.

HINTS TO BUYERS

From information supplied by Sellers, but for which the Editors of THE REVIEW do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

Greenshields, Limited, Montreal.

There is activity in every department of Greenshields, Limited, at present. Spring lines, in most cases, occupy the attention of the heads of the departments, and the staff is kept busy.

Their ready-to-wear department is having many big repeats for their popular lines shown for this season. They anticipated that there would be a shortage of many lines of piece goods for the making-up trade, and, consequently, have placed orders early and in large quantities, so as to insure deliveries of repeats and late shipments. The range of dress skirts shown by this department for Spring are the best in style and price yet presented to the trade. In all cases, values are better than previous seasons. The many other lines necessary to make a ready-to-wear department complete are shown in an unlimited range. Their business in whitewear for December delivery has been greater than ever, and they have most of the lines now complete so as to insure prompt deliveries.

In Greenshields' E department, business is active in all lines. Stock comprises hosiery, underwear, gloves, handkerchiefs and ribbons. They report a large business in ladies' Wolsey underwear, both in combination and vests. Fall underwear, they state, has been very difficult to get deliveries of, and, as a consequence, merchants should anticipate wants as early as possible.

In hosiery lines, they are showing one of the finest ranges of plain cotton, lisle lace, and also embroidered hosiery. Of the above, they have an exceptionally good range. Further, they are in a position to handle all orders early, but state that repeats will be difficult to procure. They state that Canadian cotton lines will be the same in price as this season. In some of these lines they have some special numbers confined to themselves which they expect to do good business with.

Handkerchiefs for Christmas trade are shown in various varieties. Any repeats on these lines will be 25 per cent. higher than last purchases, with no chance of delivery before next Fall. Irish and Swiss embroidery handkerchiefs are among the lines shown.

About Ourselves

Thoroughly comprehending the growing needs of the dry goods trade, we are exerting ourselves to make The Review more interesting and valuable with every issue. What we have accomplished during the past year has brought us many encomiums from members of the trade. What we hope to accomplish next year is calculated to merit still more the appreciation of our readers.

The strong position The Review has attained encourages us to take a big step in advance, and we can promise that every department in the paper will be considerably improved. A big increase in the number of fashion illustrations used will be one of the most striking features. We recognize how helpful these are to the retailer, and our connection in Europe and the United States will enable us to give a splendid service.

Assistant Editor Wanted.

We want an assistant editor for The Review, preferably a young man with some dry goods experience, who has an ambition to become one of the leading authorities in the trade. Must have the ability to write clearly. The right man can make a position for himself worth, in time, $5,000 a year. State experience, etc.

Many New Western Readers.

R. J. Gay will return in a few days from a very successful four months' trip through the West, in the interests of The Review's subscription department. There has not been a new store opened, on the main or branch lines between Port Arthur and Vancouver, which Mr. Gay has not visited. He returned to Winnipeg by way of the Canadian Northern from Edmonton. As a result of Mr. Gay's trip, The Review's list of readers in the West has been very materially augmented.

To the Trade.

Dear Sir,—During the assorting season—the months of October and November—our regular travelers are concentrating their energies on the placing of spring goods. Realizing the importance of quick shipments during the assorting season and how much easier it is to ship goods bought personally than through travelers' orders, owing to the fact of goods being sometimes sold out before the travelers' orders come to hand, we believe it would be to our mutual advantage for customers to visit our warehouses and place their orders with us personally. Never before have we had such a large and well-assorted stock as at present, and, taking into consideration the state of the market, have never shown better value.

Yours very truly,
JOHN MACDONALD & CO., LTD.

Granby Manufacturing Co.

An evidence of the development of the comb industry in Canada is furnished by a visit to the comb factory of the Granby Mfg. Co., Granby, Que. M. Kelly, the proprietor of this factory, has a good organization and many exclusive machines are installed. Although the factory was started only this year, the concern already numbers the leading Canadian jobbers as its customers. They turn out a comprehensive line of plain and fancy back and side combs in shell, amber, black and pearl grey, besides a general line barettes, etc.

This firm is alive to the value of novelties, and just now their line of staple combs is enhanced by a wide variety of "Spanish," or high-back combs. Brilliant-set combs are still proving active sellers, and the new initial combs have a fair demand. Accuracy in every detail of manufacture and quality in material is their watchword.

The "Frechette" comb is their latest novelty, and fulfills that "long-felt" want. The "Frechette" comb, which is patented, is simply the addition of a band of celluloid between the top of the comb and the teeth. This band is simple in construction, and absolutely prevents the comb from falling out. This patent is attached to all styles of combs retailing from 50c. to $5. This comb will prove an active Fall seller, and needs to be seen to be appreciated. Jobbers will soon show the range, but samples may be had by applying direct to the manufacturers.

Michael Phelan.

Michael Phelan of Lindsay Buildings, Montreal, has received a full line of samples from Lee, Behrens & Co., Limited, and is showing same to his firm's customers. The silk and wool tapestries, antique silks and brocatelles, damasks, chintzes and cretonnes, embrace designs which are rare and beautiful.

Among the antique silks and tapestries are found Italian, French and Portuguese designs, reproduced with the most wonderful exactitude, in Old World colorings that are most effective.

Debenhams (Canada), Limited, Toronto.

Debenhams (Canada), Limited, are now showing a large range of silk velvings in all the different styles and colors. This firm also carries a very complete stock of dress nets and laces. They are showing a splendid range of all-overs in plain nets and laces, including filet guipure and all the other laces of the season. They would draw special attention to their fine showing of lace robes in black and white.

Velvets are carried in a large range of colors, both in plain and couche. Particular attention is drawn to Debenham's special makes. "Premier" and "Century," for millinery and costume purposes; also to their special quality D 55 velveteen, dyed and finished by J. & J. Worrall. This cloth is carried in all street and fancy shades. This firm is now showing a fine range of dress materials, including satin amazons, venetians, panamas, voiles, etc. In silks and ribbons, Debenham's stock is complete in all scarce and up-to-date colorings. Mail orders or requests for samples for any of these numbers will be given the very best attention.

Ladies' Wear Blouse Factory.

Ladies' Wear, Limited, have now in working order a new and up-to-date plant, totally separate from their neckwear factory, for the making up of ladies' waists and blouses. A competent designer and operative staff has been engaged, which is working under the direct supervision of the heads of the firm. The early line for January delivery is now on the road, and has met with a most encouraging success, particularly in the higher numbers.

Robt. C. Wilkins.

Robt. C. Wilkins, Montreal, manufacturer of Rooster Brand lines, has ready for immediate delivery a superior showing of Scotch flannel vests in a variety of new patterns. These lines are low-cut, buttoned by three large pearl buttons, with two flat pockets. Prices range from $15 a dozen up. Travelers are now showing complete lines of Spring goods.

Harold F. Watson.

Harold F. Watson, 6 St. Sacrament street, Montreal, has been appointed to look after the Canadian interests of E. Ploton and J. Martel, Yokohama. He is showing their complete lines of Jap silks, handkerchiefs and kimonos. Jobbers and manufacturers interested in these lines are invited to write for current quotations.

Salesmanager Wanted

A large general importing house, specializing in Dry Goods, but having a wide range of Merchandise, wants a salesmanager who can organize and handle a force of salesmen.

Fairbairn's Pleated Skirts.

On another page is given a cut of the latest New York styles in pleated skirts. This skirt is made by Rhys D. Fairbairn. It is properly tailored and finished, and the fit is perfect. Merchants should remember that customers' goods can be made up by this firm in either this or in any of the now popular pleated styles.

Show Card Talk.

It is unnecessary at this enlightened day and age of mercantile progressiveness to offer any argument for the use of show cards; they are a recognized necessity in the modern store. But the question that confronts the merchant is how and where to get up-to-date cards at a reasonable price, and in the quickest time possible. An attractive offer is made on another page of this issue by a St. Louis firm, which is making a special effort to reach the dry goods trade. Dealers who are using, or expect to use, show cards, will do well to look up this proposition and give the manufacurers a trial order.

Delfosse & Co.

Delfosse & Co., Canada's greatest fixture factory, Montreal, are well prepared to look after all fixture requirements for Fall trade. They call special attention to their pure wax heads, which, at present, are having a large sale. This firm's caalogue will be gladly sent on request.

Mechanical Santa Claus.

J. R. Palmenberg's Sons invite you to write for particulars, prices, etc., respecting their new wonder-worker. This is a mechanical Santa Claus, operated in a simple way by electricity. There are lifelike actions of the head, eyes, chest and hand. The face, hair, eyes, complexion and expression, wonderfully lifelike, are the acme of success in making wax figures. In stature and proportion this Santa Claus is ideal, and as an attraction for the holiday season should prove a veritable marvel in window or department.

FLANNELETTES

¶ The success of all Mohair Business and of every Mohair Business is built on the Dye and Finish given these fabrics by the Bradford Dyers' Association.

¶ Every new shade and combination and pattern are brought out in this iron-wear fabric. Just now fashionable shops are showing Black Mohairs with quarter-inch stripes of green and violet—one of the most stunning color schemes of the season.

¶ These sell all winter for the smart little dresses to wear under fur and cloth coats.

¶ For Spring there are still more novel styles in stripes and checks.

¶ You are sure of standard quality in Mohairs only when you insist on getting those Dyed and Finished by the B. D. A.

Men and Methods

A CO-OPERATIVE STORE.

Dunnville has a co-operative store, a branch of a concern whose headquarters are in Hamilton. It was opened last January, and the manager states that some progress has been made. The stock comprises general dry goods and groceries to the amount of about $9,000.

Shares were sold to farmers of the district at $5 each, and The Review was informed that the working capital is $4,000. The prospectus guaranteed 7 per cent. on the investment, and promised shareholders a division of profits over and above that, according to the amount of their purchases. In this rebate lies the advantage which the concern claims for its system of doing business. They do not pretend to sell cheaper than their competitors, but the profits, after the expense of operating is met, go back to the customers. For the first six months, The Review was told, this rebate amounted to five per cent. However, it was found that more capital would be needed, and subscribers were told that each one would be required to hold not less than three shares. In the case of those owning fewer than this number the profits were retained to be applied on the extra shares. It is expected that earnings will show an increase during the last half of the year.

Shareholders have the privilege of withdrawing at any time upon giving due notice.

The business is operated on the strictly cash system.

Similar stores have been opened at Bismark, Wellandport and Silverdale. The buying for all of them is done at Hamilton. The Review would consider this a disadvantage, for in purchasing stock there are always local conditions to be taken into consideration. The needs of one locality are generally different from those of another.

Clothing has been carried, but this will be dropped.

The Review has a copy of the firm's prospectus and will go into fuller descriptions of this business if any of its readers wish more detailed information.

SPLENDID OTTAWA STORE.

In this issue The Review shows a cut of Charles Ogilvy's splendid new store at Ottawa. The building is quite imposing, and, as may be seen, is constructed on the most modern lines. A series of spacious show windows provide for plenty of effective display, a very important factor in successful merchandising at the present time. The lighting facilities throughout are excellent. The interior fittings and arrangement are right up to the minute.

Chas. Ogilvy's New Store, Ottawa.

Charles Ogilvy started business in 1887 at 92 Rideau Street, in which thoroughfare no dry goods store had before been conducted. He had previously spent twelve years with the late firm of Elliott & Hamilton. It was soon seen that the location was a good one. In 1892 No. 94 was added, and later on Nos. 96 and 98. The premises were made into one, and an extension of twenty-five feet built to the rear of Nos. 96 and 98. Departments were laid out in modern and convenient form, and business increased until it had attained double the volume done at the time this extension was made. Then the present premises were projected.

Mr. Ogilvy attributes a great deal of his success to the staff which he has gathered round him. The policy of the house has always been strict attention to business, good values, one price, clean stock and a close study of customers' needs and convenience.

On the first floor are located the ready-to-wear, boys' clothing and housefurnishings departments. The children's section is to be made a specialty. Part of the second floor is given over to dressmaking rooms.

BEAT CATALOGUE PRICE 20 PER CENT.

Rowe & Jackson, of Dunnville, carry general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments, furs, millinery, housefurnishings and clothing. Both members of the firm are diligent readers of trade newspapers, from which they extract a great deal of valuable information. To even the casual observer their window and interior decoration furnish evidence of the fact that they are in touch with progressive ideas.

Different from many retailers elsewhere, they find millinery a line that pays a splendid profit. This may be credited in part to the presence of several good-sized industries in the town employing upwards of five hundred girls, who earn good wages and purchase freely. However, the chief credit undoubtedly belongs to the management. It is worthy of note that all the buying is done by Mr. Jackson himself, although, of course, the head milliner is always present. Formal openings are the rule. Any accumulation of stock that is not really staple in character is never taken into account at inventory time.

In the ready-to-wear department only mantles and skirts are handled. There is no trouble in regard to alterations. This condition is maintained through close attention to assortment of sizes.

Business is conducted on the cash and credit basis, although credits are small. At the outset, the intention was to stick to the cash system. This, however, was afterwards considered inadvisable, for the reason that both Mr. Rowe and Mr. Jackson were well known in the community, and many old friends, including farmers of considerable means, expected credit, and there was a chance that some of them might have been offended at a refusal. "Nevertheless," Mr. Jackson told The Review, "it might have been just as well had we stuck to our original resolve."

Mail order houses send considerable quantities of goods into the town, although local merchants are well aware that these concerns offer few better prices than they do. As a matter of fact, instances can be quoted where catalogue prices were considerably higher. A short time ago a lady brought to this store some dress goods samples procured from a Toronto mail order house. The material that took her fancy was not in stock when she wrote in for it. She was able to procure it at Rowe & Jackson's for $1 per yard, whereas, the Toronto price was $1.25.

Furs are prominently displayed on a table running down the centre of the store.

CARRIES NO MILLINERY.

F. R. Lalor, of Dunnville, has a large trade. His stock occupies three floors. Groceries are confined to an altogether separate store. Clothing and tailoring are two active departments. The knitted goods section also is prominent. No millinery is carried. Business is done on the cash and credit system. Notions are well displayed at the front.

SELLERS, GOUGH'S FINE PREMISES.

The Sellers, Gough Fur Company, Toronto, have probably the best equipped retail fur store in Canada. An exterior and several interior views appear in another section of this issue. While the cuts show the premises to have a rich appearance throughout they really do not do justice to the actual conditions.

The frame of the store front is of marble, surmounted by copper cornice of ornate design, and the entrance is inlaid with marble mosaic.

The color scheme of the ground floor is red and green, the walls and carpets of the former and the fixtures of the latter in weathered oak. On each side are displayed cabinets with heavy green pulsh curtains.

In the ladies' waiting-room the woodwork is done in white enamel, the paper being a light green, and three large mirrors mounted with electric lights are set in the wall. The furnishings are of mahogany, and the carpet is mauve to match the several settees.

NOTIONS PRACTICALLY SELL THEMSELVES.

Shier Bros., of Dunnville, conduct a strictly cash business. They have been established only about seven months and seem well satisfied with the results so far. Not a cent's worth of credit is given to anyone. People are well aware of this fact and there is no difficulty experienced in carrying out the system. The lines handled are general dry goods, millinery, mantles and skirts. Millinery has been good.

An excellent feature is the display of notions, just inside the entrance. By this arrangement it is found that the goods practically sell themselves. They are located where everyone going into the store must see them.

DUNNVILLE'S OLDEST DRYGOODSMAN.

When F. J. Ramsey started business in Dunnville, thirty-three years ago, he was quite a young man. None of his competitors of that time are in the field now, so that he can claim to be the oldest active drygoodsman. At that he appears to be just in the prime of his life.

The lines carried are general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments, housefurnishings, clothing and boots and shoes. The cash and credit is followed.

Clothing occupies an exclusive store that is up-to-date in every respect. Boots and shoes are a good paying department. Carpets, rugs, oilcloths, linoleums, wall papers, curtains, etc., are located on the first floor.

Mr. Ramsey stated a good many mail orders are sent from the town, but he knows that local stores sell as cheaply in most lines as the catalogue houses, without taking into consideration freight, express or postage.

NOTES.

J. A. Bicknell, of Dunnville, carries general dry goods and groceries.

L. Werner, of Dunnville, carries general dry goods, clothing, furs, housefurnishings and groceries.

Galbraith & Bell, of Dunnville, conduct a general store, with dry goods on one side and groceries on the other.

F. Schofield, of Dunnville, carries general dry goods, ready-to-wear garments (mantles and skirts) and furs. He gives very little credit. Ready-to-wear and furs are both active lines.

Good Advertising

How to Produce It

Brief Talks Given Monthly By T. J. Tobin

TELL THE PEOPLE WHAT THEY WANT TO KNOW

It would be well worth every ad. man's while to have that little line printed on a good-sized card, framed and hung up where it would look him squarely in the face every time he sat down at his desk.

What is the purpose of an ad., if it is not to tell the people what they want to know?

If you bought space in a paper to advertise a house for sale, you wouldn't merely state that it was a stone, brick, concrete or frame structure, as the case might be, and that you were willing to transfer the deed for so much. No, certainly not. What you would say would probably run something like this:

> Three-storey, red brick dwelling, on Gladstone Avenue, in a pretty residential district; on a lot 60 x 100 feet; set back thirty feet from the street line; brownstone trimmings; splendid lawn; spacious verandah, front and back; twelve rooms; all conveniences; open plumbing; polished floors; hot water heating; electric light. $8,000.

If you were strongly confident that the house would command the price asked, you might like to run a cut of it as well.

You would endeavor to give prospective purchasers a good idea of just what the house looked like. You would tell them exactly what they wanted to know about it. A desire would be created in their minds to possess such a property as you offered, and nine out of every ten would be round to inspect it for themselves. The ad. would have done its work and it would be up to the house to make good.

From a pile of retail ads. I have just picked up one in which this line appears:

$3 Waists for $1.50.

Note the difference between that item and this one taken from another ad. that has been received for criticism:

> Pretty white waists, of fine Swiss lawn, back trimmed with 4 rows of hemstitching and 6 rows tucks; 4 rows ½-inch tucks and three rows ¼-inch tucks down each side; wide box pleat of medallion pattern embroidery down front; trimmed on each side with a row of 1-inch val. insertion; open front; ¾ sleeve, with hemstitched cuff; sizes 36 to 40; a dainty, pretty waist, and excellent value at $2.

Which of these two paragraphs is likely to sell the greater number of waists? Certainly the one which gives customers a word picture of the goods. The selling power of the other is practically nil. Its writer labors under the erroneous impression that people will rush to purchase just because an article is advertised at a reduced price. Let him put out two lines of waists and describe one of them fully, treating the other in the manner shown in the first quotation above. I venture to say that there would be five to ten times as many inquiries for the former as for the latter.

The most eloquent illustration of the value of descriptive advertising is to be found in the growth of the retail mail order houses. They send catalogues from one end of Canada to the other and customers order without seeing the goods. The system must be generally satisfactory, for the business of these concerns has expanded wonderfully during the past few years. To good advertising—descriptive advertising—their success is mainly due.

A lady several hundred miles from, say, Toronto, wants a skirt. She picks up the local paper and sees that a home store advertises some at $5. They are set down merely as skirts of certain colors, with the promise of large assortment added. She has decided in her own mind what kind of a garment will suit her taste, but there is nothing in this ad. to excite her interest. A mail order catalogue is consulted, and in a moment she runs across a full page description of the style of skirt she has in view. The details of make and appearance are given in such a way that she can almost see it. A mail order is forwarded, and the skirt comes from Toronto. It might easily happen that among the $5 garments referred to in the local ad. was one of the same sort, which she would have purchased had she known it was there.

I have often had retailers tell me that they sell as cheaply as the catalogue houses, but that, at the same time, the big city concerns take a lot of business away from them. Why is this? I am convinced that the class of advertising matter used by the majority of local merchants has a lot to do with it. "If we could only get the people to come in and compare prices, we could overcome this competition to a large extent,' I have been told time and time again. These men have not yet come to a full realization of the power of good advertising. By utilizing their newspaper space in the proper manner they can attract the people to their stores and incite all the price comparison that they desire.

Describe your goods with the idea of creating in the minds of your public a desire to possess them. The line, "$3 Skirts for $1.50" conveys no definite intelligence to a reader. She wants to know a whole lot more about these skirts, and the most successful retailers are recognizing this condition and framing their advertising policy accordingly.

I have before me a neat sample of the advertising of Hodgens Bros., Goderich. It is well written and well set up. I don't know whether chief credit for the latter feature belongs to the firm or to the printer. Very likely it should be divided equally. If a merchant insists upon good typography, and provides the right kind of copy, he will generally find his printer equal to the occasion. It must be remembered that the best compositor cannot get satisfactory results from poor copy.

I like the way Hodgens Bros. try to excite interest in their goods, even before the scope for descriptive work is very limited. Here is a paragraph which illustrates what I mean: "Broadcloth at $1.50. This broadcloth is exceptionally fine, and has a handsome finish. We import it ourselves, and can recommend it to any person wanting an extra fine costume. It is made from pure Australian yarns, and is 50 to 52 inches wide. We show it in navy, brown, light shades and black."

"The store is bright, handsome, comfortable, the attendants courteous and anxious to please; the service prompt."

This is taken from an ad. of the Duncan, Ferguson Co., Stratford. If the claims made are not exaggerated the excellence of premises and service is sure to exert a strong, attractive force upon the people of Stratford and vicinity. The paragraph appears with several others under the heading, "Sound reasons for coming to D., F. Co.'s."

Perry & Alport, of Orillia, are grasping the descriptive idea. No doubt they are finding that its employment makes their advertising much more profitable than it ever was before.

* * *

R. H. Knight, Limited, of Sault Ste. Marie, send in a folder which was distributed at the annual Fall fair. It is devoted almost entirely to mantles. Several good cuts, with descriptive matter, are used. The paper is of excellent quality, and I have no fault to find with the typography. However, I am not a believer in this form of advertising. If the folder had been mailed to a select list of people I would look for results, but utilized as it was I consider that its cost was practically so much waste money. The same class of matter in newspaper space should be effective. Here is something that will appeal to the public: "Our golden rule is to right a wrong as soon as sighted, and we will refund the purchase price on any garment not satisfactory."

Madill Bros., Napanee, had an attractive Fall opening announcement. Splendid effect was lent by a 10x7-inch half-tone illustrating a late Paris gown designed by Bechoff-David.

The publicity methods of a general store can scarcely be dealt with in the same manner as those of an exclusive dry goods store. A. Sweet & Co., of Winchester, Ont., carry a large variety of lines—dry goods, hardware, boots and shoes, furniture, etc. So many items are used in their ads. that very little descriptive work is possible. I would advise that dry goods, particularly ready-to-wear garments, be described more, even if it is necessary to speak of fewer lines. This ad., however, is a pretty good one, and I feel sure that the writer will see the force of my suggestion above.

Three ads. have come to hand from Prowse Bros., Limited, Charlottetown, P.E.I. They were run in connection with a clearance sale in August. Each occupied a full page space. There is one of them that I would like to reproduce, but, unfortunately, it is badly printed.

These ads. are as good as will be found anywhere in Canada, so far as the typographical arrangement goes, though, as mentioned above, the paper printing them does poor press work.

Prowse Bros.' adman provided the store's customers with a lot of interesting matter in the body of the ads., but became too enthusiastic in preparing the introduction to one of them. He used such expressions as "Hurricane of wondrous bargains," "Low prices will hold high carnival," "Fast and furious bargain-giving." However, he almost redeems himself in another introduction which reads this way: "Such bargain-giving is rare—such bargains are rarely available. We anticipated the crowds—the sales—the enthusiasm. We knew the people would respond as they have responded. Our reputation of doing as we advertise to do we guard most carefully. We make no statements—no claims—that we cannot substantiate. That's why our sale has been so successful. * * * We cheerfully refund the money where purchases fail to please." This is quite neatly put.

In some cases I am inclined to believe that admen use extravagant phrases because they know their employers still believe them effective.

The ads. of David Spencer, Limited. Victoria, B.C., and the Northway Co., Orillia, are reproduced because they provide some splendid examples of the descriptive idea. The latter is particularly good. Among its other points of merit is the fact that all headings, while neat, stand out and command attention. It provides one of the best contradictions I have seen of the claim that a lot of descriptive matter makes an ad. too heavy to be readable. The heads and little introductions excite the reader's interest, and the paragraphs below supply word-pictures of the goods.

Qua & Patterson, Collingwood, have sent in a good sample of their publicity. The ad. looks well but considering that the store specialize on ready-to-wear garments, it is distinctly lacking in the descriptive quality. With some improvement in this respect Qua & Patterson's advertising would rank well with that of many city stores.

I have on my desk a number of other ads., submitted for criticism, but lack of space requires that I leave them over till next month.

Interesting Extracts and Ideas

"Always the best of everything for the least money" is the motto advertised by Gray & Parker, London.

These $12 waists will be sold Saturday for $9. Just as a leader for Saturday, so don't expect us to sell you one of the waists next week for $9. Must come Saturday if you want one. They are made over ivory silk. One in elegant eyelet lace, with handsome applique trimmings. Another in fine net lace, trimmed with guipure insertion and ribbon. Both with short sleeves, and open at the back.—Gray & Parker London. This is fair descriptive work.

"One of the biggest glove bargains ever offered in this city. Extra fine skins. Perfectly made. Every stitch neatly done. Shapely cut, perfect fit. Black, white, tan, slate, mode, white with black stitching, and black with white stitching."

"These $5 skirts of ours are going to make a pronounced hit. Splendid all-wool materials. Four handsome plaid designs. Two different styles. One with eleven gore, pleated panel front and tailored seams. The other is seven gore, pleated side panels, finished with strappings. Also navy and black vicuna skirts. One of the most graceful and shapely styles in the store. Pleated front and side gores."

"The cash basis is our method of doing business. One price and always the lowest. Every article and material marked in plain figures, no bartering. We ask one price and stick to it. That method always wins. It has succeeded in Sturgeon Falls because you see the fairness of it. Perhaps we do not make as much money as we might but we are getting a reputation for fair dealing, and people call us obliging because we look after their interests. It pays. . . We have tried to be most generous in our dealings, giving money back when goods are not to your liking, and endeavoring each day to see what a thoroughly good store this can be made. We have been doing ourselves permanent service by adding new customers daily."—Michaud & Levesque, Sturgeon Falls. This is good stuff, though somewhat lengthy. The subject might more effectively have been spread over several ads., only a short paragraph being devoted to it in each. Your customers don't want to read wordy introductions.

"Come one, come all to the great slashing sale during this month."—The West Nipissing Dry Goods Co. I do not like that word "slashing" or a number of others that are often used to express wholesale slaughter of prices.

"Visitors welcome. Visitors to the city are requested to make use of the many advantages afforded by this store, with the distinct understanding that the acceptance of our hospitality entails no obligation to buy. Free telephone service, free checking of parcels, etc. Above all, a cordial welcome and the most courteous of treatment will be accorded all who will favor us with a call."—J. H. Chapman & Co., London.

"Of course it is understood that our buyers are privileged persons when they visit European looms. Their's is the favor to pick and choose."—David Spencer, Ltd., Victoria, B.C. A great majority of this store's customers will refuse to swallow that statement bodily, and do you wonder at it?

"Ladies' double-breasted, box-back coat, of black cheviot, 50 inches long, wide stitched, self strap down back, patch pocket, self cuffs and flat collar, trimmed with fancy design in silk braids, body and sleeves mercerized lined."—Good descriptive paragraph, the kind that, with the price mentioned, sells goods.

"Well dressed boys are generally brighter and more manly, largely because they feel equal to any of their fellows, and it develops a spirit of confidence in them."—Allan's, Montreal.

"Our clothing not only looks good; it makes men who wear it look good."

"Variety the spice of life. If this be true, we may safely say that with nearly three hundred silk waists to select from, variety is the life of our silk waist department."—Sinclair's, Belleville.

"You will find that every Right House suit has that smart distinction in style and fit that marks the apparel of the well dressed woman."—Thomas C. Watkins, Hamilton.

"Our showing of blouses reveals the prettiest and daintiest of refined styles that are at once practical and moderately priced."

"Don't be careless about your clothes. If your fortune is made and all your ambitions realized you can afford to dress as poorly as you please. The great majority of us have our fortune still to make and our ambitions still to realize. Our success will depend largely upon the impression we make upon those about us. Good clothes are a great help. The stranger you meet seans your clothes more closely than he does your business card. They tell him more."

"Bargain coupon sale, beginning October 14. Cut the coupons from the advertisements and bring them with you. Each one represents a genuine bargain. To the lady presenting the largest number of coupons we will give free $10 worth of any merchandise in the store. To each of the two ladies presenting the next largest number of coupons we will give free $7.50 worth of any merchandise in the store."—Glanville's, Limited, Calgary.

"Ladies' double-breasted suit, in French wool, tweed effects, shaped back jacket, 22 inches long, neatly trimmed with fancy braid, self flat collar and cuffs, trimmed to match, mercerized lined throughout. Smart fifteen-gored, pleated skirt, with stitched self fold. Price $20."—Good descriptive paragraph.

"The new Autumn dress goods and common sense. Should schools teach economy and good taste in dress? A European fashion writer claims they should. For forty-seven years the John White Co.'s store has been a university of the Art of Fashion. Year by year it has shown the best practical examples of weaving in the world. Common sense is the guiding hand which leads the way to our decisions as to what shall be sold here season after season—a common sense which shall be equally common sense to the wealthy woman; to the woman of moderate means who wishes quality; to the woman of small purse who wishes beauty and service at the minimum of outlay."—The John White Co., Woodstock.

"The new Peter Pan waist at Fraser's, $3.25. Made of fine white muslin in one of the prettiest styles you could wish to see. Has short sleeves with turn-back cuffs trimmed with pleated ruffle and edged with val. lace. Has wide box pleat down front in pleated ruffle effect trimmed on each side with val. lace. Four rows of one-half inch tucks and five rows baby tucks down each side in front. Eight rows one-half inch tucks in back. Open front, hemstitched linen collar. Sizes 34 to 40. In every way a lovely waist and very fashionable."—A. C. Fraser & Co., Brandon, Man. Good descriptive paragraph.

DO YOU KEEP PROPER BOOKS?

"Any man who fails and who has not for five years before his failure kept proper books, shall be liable to a fine of $800.00 and one year's imprisonment."

That's the law.

You will notice that the law makes distinctions— it assumes that there is a difference between properly and improperly kept books.

The law distinctly specifies that a man must keep proper books.

WINDOW DRESSING

THE ART OF DISPLAY

INTERIOR DECORATION

The Building of Window Trims

No Set Rules Can Be Laid Down — Mainly a Matter of Individual Method—Some Useful Hints for Young Trimmers.

No set of men work more variously than do the window trimmers. Their methods are, in most cases, unique and individual. No two approach their problems in quite the same way.

One trimmer will make out sketches, often of high merit, and even in colors, showing the effect of the finished window. He who can do this, and who has the stock to draw from to properly work out these schemes, is, as a general rule, in the advanced rank of decorators.

Many excellent trimmers are not able to set their ideas on paper in this fashion. From experience, however, and from their knowledge of the stores they serve, and the class of trade each one attracts, they are able to put in telling displays without any great amount of preparation.

Some draw out rough plans on papers, while still others arrange displays in a small room, and when the desired effect has been attained, they are transferred bodily to the windows.

There is no hard and fast rule governing the production of good window displays. Each trimmer has to work out his own standing, along the lines that suit his own individual case.

Study Trade of Store.

Perhaps the most important element that enters into success is careful study of a store's trade, and a grasp ofthe best meehod of selling goods to that store's clientele. The introduction of the right amount of novelty, of the right kind, is a consideration. There must be no haphazard work ; every move should be the result of methodical study.

Xmas Fur Window, by A. A. Garon, for Z. Paquet, Quebec. Entered in The Review's Xmas display competition.

When the nature of the display has been decided upon the trimmer should carefully size up the goods he is going to show, and in his own mind weigh the points he wishes to bring out most prominently. His drapes must all show the goods to the best advantage—just how they best fall and fold, how the play of light and shade affects them, the beauty of color or colors, etc.

He must do more than this ; he must be a close student of fashion and never lose sight of the style value of the goods. In putting in a window, he should keep before his mind the manner in which the materials are to be made up. Thus at the present time his work is influenced by the fact that simplicity is the rule, both for dressy gowns and those for street wear. Plain effects with long lines, and showing deep pleats and folds, are the style idea. In keeping with this the trimmer is constructing drapes that show long lines, with plenty of plain spaces and groups of long pleats.

Before starting to work on the window the trimmer will do well to choose some scheme of arrangement. Take a few pieces of goods into your workroom, provided it is large enough and light enough, and experiment with them until you are satisfied that you have struck the best method of showing them.

Fall Millinery Opening Window, by Balfour Dickson, for Ogilvy's, Montreal.

Color Combinations.

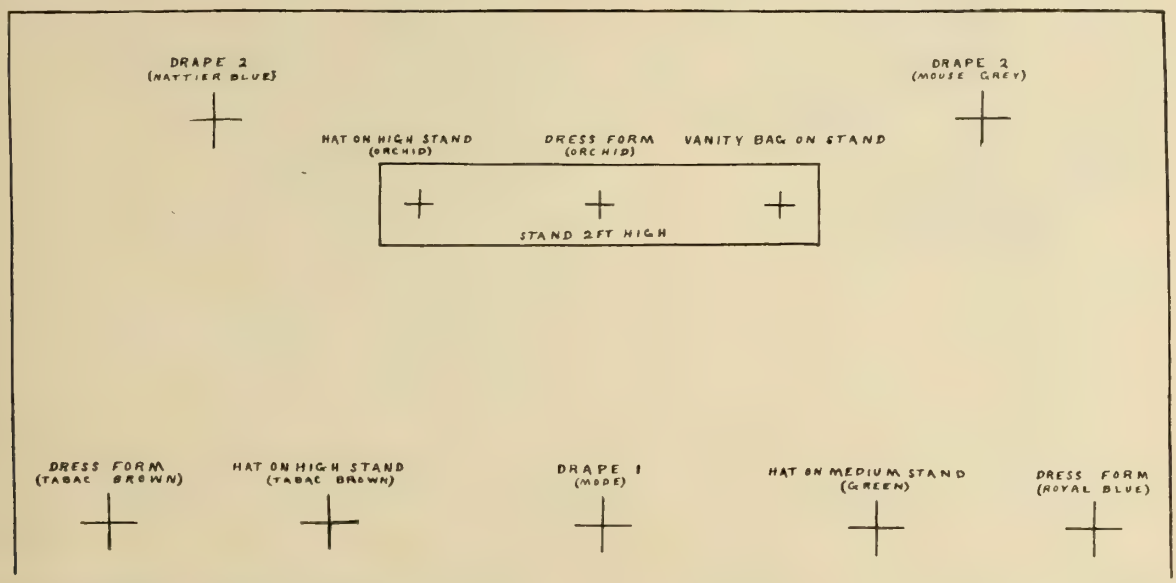
Having decided upon the nature of the drapes, color combination comes next. Have a table placed in a quiet but well lighted corner of the store, and carry several bolts of materials there. These should be opened up, for a yard or two, and arranged and re-arranged until the desired combination is arrived at. A plan of the window can be made, and the position of each color marked in. This is best done by giving each material a number.

The colors selected, plan and put in the background and floor covering. Also select fixtures and get everything handy.

A common mistake among beginners is that of building trims up from the front. The trimmer should start from the background and work to the front.

A young display man cannot do too much experimenting in combination of colors. Red and yellow are two colors that he will have to be careful with. These should never be made too strong, but used mainly in touches. Red, in some shades, shows up well in monotone windows. Lemon is good with white, and also—used sparingly—with lavender. Black and white is favored by some, but the contrast is too strong to be altogether artistic. Green and yellow do not combine well, but lavender and grey do. Champagne is good with many colors.

Fall Dress Goods Opening Window, by Balfour Dickson, for Ogilvy's, Montreal.



Trimmers in high-class stores use few colors in a window—often only two or three. After all, shades vary so much that no set rules for combinations can be of much guidance.

Toronto Windows During the Month

Hangings Taking the Place of Fancy Backgrounds—Plain and Color Scheme of a Dress Goods Window.

Toronto decorators have been putting in some very rich windows this Fall. The displays form a good illustration of the tendency toward better goods that has been such a marked feature of the trade during the past few years. Rich silks, glossy broadcloths, with their accessories, need little in the way of background. Trimmers are, therefore, dropping elaborate fancy effects for background for the various displays, but are in beautiful contrast to the mahogany panelling forming the permanent background. This firm pays extra attention to display and their windows have been wonderfully attractive this Fall.

The T. Eaton Co. are just about finishing the new portion of their building, and the new windows are all in, though not fitted up yet. They will give, when finished, a very large addition to the existing available window space, and the whole series will keep A. E. Apted and his staff busy. The drapes given this month are from a fine dress window put in for this firm. The display illustrated so aptly many of the salient points taken up in the first article this month that The Review is also presenting a working plan of its lay-out, with color scheme. Counting mode and grey as neutrals, the colors used are only three—brown, blue and violet in the new orchid tone. As in the Murray windows, the stands and fixtures were very handsome. The latter were made of square, satin-finished brass tubing.

Rough Plan of Window Display, Showing Color Combination. In the Actual Trim the Dress Forms, Hats and Drape at Front were not in a Straight Line, and the Stand Which formed the Centrepiece was set on the Oblique.

plain but rich hangings. Displays are handsome and dignified, and make their appeal through the beauty of the goods.

W. A. Murray & Co. have, with few exceptions, always followed this style of window trim. The firm enjoys an exclusive trade, and fancy backgrounds are of little use in their displays. For the whole series of opening windows had backgrounds of deep green plush hangings, falling in straight folds from a heavy brass rod. To mark the dividing line between displays a plush-covered pillar, topped with an electric light in a large frosted globe, was used. Festooned from each of these pillars was a heavy gilded chain. The monogram of the firm, cut out of wood in artistic design, and gilded, was placed at the centre of each festoon. Very handsome fixtures of satin-finished brass were used, and they added not a little to the distinction and attractiveness of the trims.

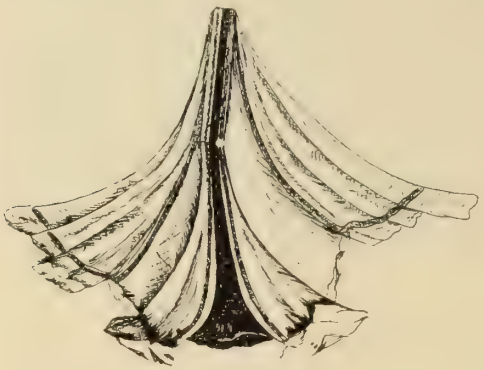
The Robert Simpson Co., who are steadily developing the higher class end of their trade, have also dropped elaboration in backgrounds, except for special occasions. They are using this Fall hangings of rich brocaded silk, in a soft biscuit tone. These not only form a telling

Montreal Displays

The Big Stores Insist Upon a High Standard of Decorative Work—A Good Window Described.

Of late years Montreal window trimming has undergone a very marked change. The art of draping color combination artistically has superseded the practice of crowding the displays with about as great a quantity of goods as could be gotten into them. There was so much shown that when one looked at it there was nothing to stand out and command attention. The fine effect of color and the distinction of style were points that no attempt was made to develop.

Now Montreal can pride herself upon having some of the best window trimmers in America. Several stores, notably Murphy's, Ogilvy's and Scroggie's, are making big strides in the matter of both window and interior decoration.



Fall opening windows were particularly good. The millinery display reproduced this month is by Mr. Dickson, Ogilvy's trimmer. The frames of the mirror background were covered with chiffon, while the bull-rushes in one corner gave a dash of Autumn color. In the top of a birch stump, with daisies entwined, were three Tiffany lights, which lent a pretty effect, especially at night. The other corner contained three wreaths of daisies, four, three and two feet in diameter. The display of merchandise was confined to two costumes and twelve hats.

Scroggie's had a uniform white and green background, hung with maple leaves, in all of their windows.

GARON'S XMAS FUR DISPLAY.

The Christmas fur window reproduced was decorated throughout in the style of Renaissance curved work, in gilt and dead white. The curtains were Nile green velvet, and the floor was covered with white felt, with a single width of velvet running diagonally across it. Small frosted electric lights were arranged along the border, and between them were small bows of gilt tinsel. The two side sections of the background had mirrors set in them, and on small shelves in front were placed hollyhocks in natural wood jardineres.

Drape No. 1.

Drape No. 2.

Greater Interest than Ever

There are More and Better Trimmers in Canada Than in Any Previous Year, so Xmas Competition Should be Greater Success.

During the past year a great improvement has been made in the quality of Canadian window displays, and the number of capable trimmers has increased very materially. Therefore The Review hopes to find more interest than ever manifested in its Christmas window competition.

The prizes to be awarded are : First $15, second $12, and third $8.

Photos to be entered in the competition must reach this office on or before February 1, 1908. The only trimmers in Canada who are barred are those with Eaton's and Simpson's.

The Review expects to receive photos of many displays of merit, outside of the three prize-winners. Some of these will be reproduced also, and for each one so used the sum of $5 will be paid. Each photo must be accompanied by full description of the trim.

Salaries of Salespeople

Minimum According to Age Fixed by Law in Australia —Some Employers Welcome This Plan.

Elsewhere in this issue, says the Drapers' Record, we give full details of the award of the Arbitration Court in the matter of the dispute between the Shop Assistants' Union of New South Wales and various retailers in Sydney. The legal machinery available in Australia allows of a body of strikers appealing to an Arbitration Court to settle a dispute, and the judgment of the court becomes law. The award given in this particular dispute does not apply apparently to all drapery firms in Australia, but to such a large and important number of them that its limited application is a subordinate matter. In any case, other bodies of employes can appeal to the court for similar "awards" in the future, and these will doubtless be granted on somewhat the same lines. Briefly, then, we find that in Australia a minimum wage has been fixed for assistants. The wage is on a sliding scale, and varies according to age and length of service. The ultimate result is that a male assistant on attaining the age of 24, becomes entitled to a minimum wage of £2 10s a week; a lady assistant of the same age becomes entitled to £1 7s 6d a week. Various other conditions are laid down in this award in regard to employment generally, and the paternal interest of the state in the interests of the assistants is so minute in detail, that the state may almost be said to be a partner with the employer in the organization of his business. "Socialism" is a very wide term which is variously interpreted by many people, but in this award we seem to have an example of practical Socialism. It is early days yet to consider the effect the award will have on the drapery trade of Australia. According to advices received, the award has met with a very mixed reception, but it is only fair to state that one or two prominent employers of labor have cordially welcomed it. We need only observe a little patience, and we shall be able to find out from experience whether the principle of a legal minimum wage in the Australian drapery trade can be pronounced a definite success. If that should prove to be the event, labor agitators on this side will have good ground for pressing for a similar reform. The history, however, of labor legislation in Australia has not so far taught us any very valuable lessons. Indeed, many intelligent and broad-minded people in Australia state that this legislation has been carried to an absurd degree, and that a reaction against it is inevitable. In regard to this particular award we have at the moment only one important observation to make on the broad issue; and that is, that legislation against sweating is one thing of which we can all approve almost with unanimity, but that legislation fixing the wages to be paid at the different ages of employes is certainly open to controversy as an unnecessary interference with the natural movements of the labor market. So long as those movements are checked from a descent into sweating, we see no reason why they should be arbitrarily diverted by the state into one fixed groove.

C. M. ASSOCIATION NOTES.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association will take steps to acquire information as to the exact demand in the different trades for skilled help.

It was reported at a recent meeting of the executive, that the new tariffs to be issued by the railways for the territory in Ontario and the east as a result of the order of the Board of Railway Commissioners, in the international rate case, will become effective on Nov. 15. Mr. Walsh, manager of the Transportation Department, has just returned from attending the conference of shippers at Washington, where they waited upon the Interstate Commerce Commission in the interests of a uniform bill of lading.

Associations of shippers in the United States have secured the unanimous backing of the American Bankers' Association, with the result that it is confidently expected the Interstate Commerce Commission will recommend the adoption of a simple form of bill of lading, which will be merely a receipt for the goods and an undertaking to deliver them safely at destination.

The association's interest in the subject of technical education is steadily increasing. The further the matter is studied the more convinced are the members of the association that it is one of the biggest problems before them to-day. It would appear from the answer given by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the deputation from the Toronto Reform Association, who waited upon him, that the desired commission of enquiry cannot be appointed by the Dominion Government unless the proposition has the endorsement of all the provinces. The association is now taking steps to secure the acquiescence of the provincial premiers to its request

On the recommendation of the Reception and Membership Committee, the December meeting will be held in Ottawa, to be followed by a dinner in the evening, to which a number of prominent speakers from public life will be invited.

It is the intention of the association to arrange for a series of dinners during the coming Winter in the larger towns and cities throughout the country.

The annual meeting of the association for 1908 will be held in Montreal.

Illustrations and Signs

If you have a design that is printed, drawn or painted in lines or masses of black, red, dark yellow, dark green, brown, medium blue, or gold, you can have an enlarged or reduced photo-engraving made from it without any additional expense. All these colors will photograph black, and it will not be necessary to pay an artist to make a drawing unless you require the engraving in a size which will be out of proportion to the original design, either in length or height.

For instance, if you were drawing a figure standing on green grass, with a yellow coat, red tie, brown pipe, with gold ferrule or trimmings, and a black hat standing against a dull blue background, each of these colors would represent different tones or shades of black if reproduced in a photo-engraving. This simple explanation may prove valuable to any business man if he wishes to know color effects when reproduced in half-tone, and a reference to this article may save much trouble and expense.

Wash Drawings.

Line engravings are made from designs having all of the lines drawn distinctly in individual pen or brush strokes. Wash drawings, however, have the designs painted with a brush in black and white, or brown and white, and the shading and tones washed or blended together with water resembling somewhat the effect of an unfinished photograph before it is burnished. Half-tone engravings are made from wash drawings or photographs.

Tint Paper.

In the illustration given last month, the firecrackers are shaded in beautiful parallel lines. The largest cracker in its original size before reduction, was 1 inch wide and 4 inches high, and the others in proportion. To draw all these lines by hand would require several hours, and they could not be so uniform in distance. The artist buys paper "tinted" with narrow parallel lines. It can be had with lines of various thicknesses and distances apart, being uniform on each sheet, and also with lines having graduated distances between them, besides having the lines gradually thicker, so that when reduced in engraving one end will appear very dark and the other very light. Other tint papers have their entire surface covered with small dots, either all of one size and shade, or graduated in both size and density. These are called stippled backgrounds.

Stippling by hand with pen requires great care and an enormous loss of time, as each dot is made by a separate touch of the pen point. The firecrackers being indicated in outline on the original design, they are copied on tracing paper and transferred to the printed surface of the tint paper, the stems, of course, being omitted These shapes are then cut out with a pair of scissors and pasted in the proper positions over the original drawings, and the stems, curved lines and shadows are then drawn. The white (high light) lines are then painted.

You often see light, uniformly ruled or stippled backgrounds in magazine and newspaper advertisement having either plain white letters or white letters with black outlines across these tinted backgrounds. Such engravings are quickly made by lettering over the tint paper in white and then outlining with black, and the photo-engraver does the rest.

Black lettering, with white outlines, makes another attractive design on these tinted papers.

By cutting out cloud effects from magazine pictures (that is, in line engravings) and lettering on them, some excellent contrasts a reproduced. Other beautiful backgrounds can be originated by using printed cottons, like percale, calico, sleeve linings, and painting in black on these. Only such colors as are mentioned at the beginning of this article should be used, and the engraving will be perfect.

Oilcloth Signs.

The best material for this purpose is plain white. If this is not available the "marble" oilcloth, with white ground, may be used. Stretch your oilcloth on frames measuring at least 42 inches across, unless you want narrower ones. Plan out your sign in miniature on a small piece of paper.

Divide this design into squares by ruling across its face. These squares may be any size you desire, but must represent a reduced scale of the proportion which you require on your oilcloth sign. Suppose you call every half-inch on your paper one foot on your sign. If your paper design is one foot long, your sign would be 24 feet long. If your scale is one inch, the sign would be 12 feet long. Now number the squares on your design, beginning at the left top one. You may stretch as many frames of oilcloth as will conform to the height and width of sign required, and mark out the squares on each with charcoal, colored chalk, or lead pencil. Then number your squares on the oilcloth and you will be surprised how quickly and readily you can insert any letter or part of letter or design exactly when you require it, no matter what section of the sign you are working on. There are several other methods for doing this work, but for non-professionals we feel positive this is the best.

After your color is thoroughly dry you may use a sponge or rag and water to wash off chalk or charcoal marks.

RUSSIA'S COTTON MILLS.

In 1890 there were over 2,000,000 spindles in the Moscow district in Russia. From 1890 to last year, the output of the cotton manufacturing industry rose from 300,000,000 rubles per year to 600,000,000, and the progress made was of the most satisfactory sort.

America will learn with subdued interest of dividends varying from 20 per cent. as an ordinary return, to as much as 80 per cent.

Of late national jealousy and the fact that Russia has largely learned what she has employed them to find out has led to the disappearance of the English foremen, who a few years ago were common in Russian mills.

One other matter in connection with cotton in Russia calls for attention. Most of the raw material comes from America and Egypt. But in Turkestan, Russia has come into possession of a cotton growing country of great possibility. Last year over 350,000 bales came from there, and this is favored by escaping the heavy duty which foreign cotton has to pay. In the near future, probably the greater part of the Russian cotton industry will be supplied with the native raw material.

Some Book-Keeping Points

Learn the Principles that Govern Correct Systems — Who Should Pay Exchange — The Draft System and Its Advantages — Very Useful Information.

By Howard R. Wellington

It is much more important to learn the principles that govern correct systems of bookkeeping, than it is to learn any particular form according to which books should be laid out. Any intelligent man may learn bookkeeping by acquiring the fundamental principles of scientific accounting, and draw up his own forms according to those principles, the idea being that no one set of books and forms is applicable to every business. For this reason a knowledge of the principles and methods that are used by the best bookkeepers in any business will enable anyone to vary the forms so as to apply them to any other business.

In a general way, those forms are best which require the least copying, the fewest entries, the least ruling; which require the books of original entry to be posted direct to the ledger, and in which the journalizing is done by means of ruled columns. The best forms should also facilitate, so far as possible, taking balances and ascertaining losses and gains. If the bookkeeper criticizes his forms on these six lines and finds them satisfactory, while they show all the results that the proprietors wish to ascertain, he may be satisfied with his work. Although the merchant's accounts are his private records, they also partake of the nature of a trust, and should bear evidence of being kept honestly and in good faith.

If errors are made, they should be so corrected as to show the original error, and the reason for its correction. Account books should be so plain and clear as to be understood at once by a stranger who sees them for the first time, and explicit and ample enough for the guidance of an outside party who comes in to take off a statement.

When an error is made in posting, above all things never erase the original amount entirely. Some bookkeepers do this, but it should be avoided, for the reason that if someone is called in to audit the books, no trace of the amount is found, although it can readily be seen that an erasure has taken place, the impression being left that something is wrong. Then again the same bookkeeper who makes the erasure, although familiar with it for a short time, will likely lose track of the instance in time, and become confused as to the cause.

The object of bookkeeping in any establishment is primarily to know the proprietor's financial condition—what he owes, what he owns, and what is due him. If goods are sold, the record should show: (1) That the goods are actually delivered; (2), That the correct charge is made against the buyer; (3) That he receives proper credit when the account is paid. Modern bookkeeping is trying to reach these ends in the shortest possible way, and with the least expenditure of time and labor.

Exchange—Who Should Pay It?

You may say that exchange on drafts and cheques is a small matter anyway, and it really is immaterial who pays it. As a matter of fact, the exchange item in a large house collecting the bulk of its accounts by drafts runs up into the hundreds of thousands. The question is, who should pay the item—the buyer or seller?

The practice, largely in the United States, on drafts to Canada and also to some points across the line, is to add exchange charges to the draft in payment of an account, thus making the receiver or purchaser stand this expense. This seems a reasonable custom, as goods are purchased in a certain city and should be paid for in the funds of the same place. The reason why this plan is not general in our own country is probably on account of the fact that wholesalers find it necessary to adopt some systematic method of collecting accounts, and as the draft system supplies this need, rather than leave accounts outstanding indefinitely, a wholesaler would prefer to stand the exchange on each draft sent out to a customer, and have accounts collected when due.

Of course on a small account, where the goods are sold on a close margin, sometimes there is actually a loss involved, when it is necessary to make a draft for from $8 to $10 and pay exchange. Suppose an article costs $6 and is sold for $7.50, leaving a gross profit of $1.50. The cost of selling would be about 10 per cent., or 75 cents; the inside expense, including stationery, postage and cash discount, on an average about 8 per cent., or 60 cents, and the exchange on draft or cheque in payment of the account to 25 cents, or a net cost of $1.60, with an actual loss on the transaction.

It is hardly fair for a merchant to remit by cheque on his local bank, when the account is a small one, nor is it right that the seller should be obliged to pay exchange on a draft. Of course in a large amount, there is a difference, for the reason that a large account can be put through at practically the same expense.

The Draft System.

Most merchants to-day prefer to settle accounts by draft rather than by cheque or money order remittance. There are a number of reasons why the draft system has become so popular:

First: Because the buyer has no difficulty in looking after his cash discounts, as the seller makes the draft (unless otherwise advised) so as to enable the merchant to take advantage of his cash discounts every time.

Second: Because it saves a great deal of labor in making up remittances of cheques or money orders and mailing the same so as to reach the seller before the cash discount period has expired, for all that is necessary is to sign the draft and keep a record of the amount and due date.

Third: Drafts accepted, and honored at maturity, are a good advertisement for a merchant's credit. Of course we expect some dealers to take exception to this method of settling accounts, but these cases are very rare to-day, and only occur when a merchant is not convenient to a bank, or, in the case of larger houses, a certain day or days are set apart each month as "payment days," when all "passed" accounts are paid by cheque.

A very good plan for keeping a record of all acceptances or notes payable is by the use of a small diary, entering on the due date of each acceptance the amount due and the names of the parties making the draft. The bill must, of course, be recorded in the bill book for posting in the ledger, but the diary will keep the merchant informed from day to day of certain accounts payable becoming due, and preparation can be made several days ahead of time to take care of the paper, rather than have it returned. This small diary may be bought at a very low price and may be used for innumerable purposes as well.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Regal Shirt Co., Limited, Hamilton, with a capital of $200,000, divided into $100 shares. The object of the company is "to manufacture and deal in clothing and wearing apparel of all descriptions for men, women and children." The incorporators were, Robert B. McGregor and E. Hendery, travelers; Wm. J. Carroll, grocer; Mary H. Carroll, bookkeeper, and James W. Lamoureaux, manufacturer, all of Hamilton.

THE TAYLOR-ANDERSON CO.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Taylor-Anderson Company, Limited, Lucknow, with a capital of $40,000, divided into $100 shares. The object of the company is "to manufacture fine wearing apparel for men and women, and to buy and sell woolens and tailors' trimmings." The incorporators were: John G. Murdock, merchant; John G. Anderson, exporter; David C. Taylor, gentleman; Robert McAlpine, merchant tailor, and George H. Smith, bank manager, all of the village of Lucknow.

The Department Store Buyer

Good Men are in Great Demand—A High Order of Ability Required — Must Take Big Risks in Order to be Successful.

Most patrons of the great department stores overlook the fact that in the head of a particular department the patron is looking upon a graduate merchant.

With the cutting up of the great store into minute divisions, each under its responsible head, the passing customer of the old school is likely to imagine that the cutting up process, with its attendant systematizing, has reduced merchandising to a mere system of routine. A department has its counters and show cases filled with goods. Attending salespeople are at hand to make sales. An overwatching authority in some manner directs the activities of these salesmen, many of whom may be novices at the business. The salesman has his five, ten or twenty feet of floor space to serve, and the exhibiting of the goods asked for by the customer, with the making out of a cash slip and effecting change when the purchase is made, seems to constitute the day's work of the department.

It is forgotten, however, that there are single lines in these great departments which represent as much money invested as was used in stocking one of the old time general stores of a generation ago, that in the choosing of a department manager for such a place as much responsibility is shouldered upon him as fell upon the old-time country merchant who may have had a general line of goods on display and a stock in reserve in a neighboring warehouse. This head of a department in such a house may be only the manager of the department, but his salary of $5 000, $9,000, or $15,000 a year as his department warrants, suggests an income that might have satisfied the old-fashioned merchant owner of a general business.

This salary naturally becomes possible through the turning over of department stock in the course of a year. To buy stock that will sell and to buy it on terms that will insure a profit are points to be observed by this head of the department. He may be the chief buyer for the department, or the department may be such that half a dozen buyers are necessary to keep it going. In any event, however, the responsibilities of the buyer are his and the success of the department rests upon him.

To meet these responsibilities this head of the department needs all the wisdom possible for the merchant. Out of his experience he must know his department needs. If sales of a certain volume are to be anticipated for that department, goods in approximate quantity must be supplied for sale.

This knowledge never can be exact enough. The manager has his sales reports of a season before him. The goods with which his shelves are stocked have been lying before him through a certain period. He makes it a point to observe how they sell. One line may drag, perhaps, and he seeks to know the reason; another line may move actively with the least resistance, for which he seeks the reason, also.

But having these reasons for and against the sales in certain lines, the manager still is without a guide line upon the future.

It is this anticipating the future of trade which calls for the judgment of the merchant. Many things are salable according to the feeling of prosperous conditions. Under the influences of good times many lines will sell, when under reverse conditions they are drugs on the market. It is part of the manager's duty to anticipate the kind of a market which will meet his display and the success of his venture may be determined wholly by an unexpected condition of public confidence.

When the department buyer has decided upon his lines of goods and has gone into the markets for them his knowledge of men no less than his knowledge of goods may avail him. He has the unlimited commission of his house and he is to buy goods in a way to make profits for his employers. His purchases may be delivered to him in thirty days, or he may have to wait a year, two years, or five years for delivery. In the rug departments of some of the great stores it is not uncommon for a buyer to purchase rugs which will not be free of the loom for three to five years. He has found a silk rug of a certain pattern which only one family knows how to make. If he buys that rug he must wait for it, and, waiting for it, there are chances that before it is delivered changes may come in financial affairs that will leave it little in demand.

"The buyer who doesn't take risks never accomplishes anything." is the philosophy of a State street manager and buyer according to Jonas Howard, writing in the Worker's Magazine. "The buyer who doesn't make mistakes is no good, for the reason that he is afraid to risk anything. He must count upon making his reasonable mistakes, but his successes must overbalance them year after year if he succeeds. And to succeed in the end the manager must be a merchant in the full sense of the term."

With the world for his market place, the buyer's knowledge of men never has been and never will be wide enough. Manufacturers' agents will sell—that is their business. But there are all kinds of manufacturers and agents. If one of them shall be a trickster, anything in the experience of the buyer which will mark that fact to him is an asset as a business man. Any of the arts of the "mixer" which will enable the buyer to lead the seller in his direction for a favoring sale are a buyer's capital.

"Take the buyer in the Chinese markets," said a State street man. "He might have bought goods a hundred years in the United States and be at sea in the yellow kingdom. They tell you the Chinese are honest in filling their contracts, and I suppose they are. But you never know whether the Chinaman is giving you his lowest rate. He feels justified in selling to one man at one price and to another man at another price. He merely delivers the goods at the contract prices, and if the man who has bought at a lower rate than you have chances to be your competitor at home you have a problem on your hands."

In the opinion of this manager the successful buyer is born quite as much as he is made by merchant routine. He must have a head for merchandising. As to where he gets it and how, nobody questions.

"It is a problem of the individual," he says, "and it always will be an individual qualification. I would not know to-day what qualifications to ask for in a buyer. So many men of so many types and temperaments are successful buyers that the idea of choosing a buyer to suit is impossible. I know men as buyers who cannot be honest and open enough; I know others who hug the element of foxiness within them, never dealing squarely if they can avoid it. But when both types are successful, how can you choose?"

"I recall the time we took a young man in here as buyer," said another State street department manager. "It was imagined that he knew his business. He had experience enough in years of service, but even as an assistant he found his knowledge lacking. He came to me one morning, saying, 'I wish you would put me on to this work.' When I told him there wasn't a man living who could do that, I'm sure he felt that I had given him a slap in the face. But it was truth, and he knows it now.

"We are growing men right here for such positions. If the man won't grow there is nothing more to be said or done. The opportunity is here and his chances for mastering the knowledge of the merchant are on every side. When a young man asks me a question about the business which I am unable to answer it always attracts my attention to him. There's something he wants to know and I am unable to tell him. But I find out for him, and in answering the question for him I am answering it for myself. The whole department is benefited in this manner."—New York Commercial.

CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT D.C.T.A

Although nomination of officers of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association, with headquarters at Montreal, does not take place until November 9, and the elections during the first week in December, rumors are going the rounds concerning the probable candidates for the principal offices of this strong organization. One of the most persistent is to the effect that the numerous friends of R. C. Wilkins, the "I Crow" overall manufacturer Montreal, have slated him as a candidate for the presidency.

As Mr. Wilkins is one of the oldest members of the association and has held important offices, this is not at all surprising. He has been a member of the association for 26 years, and his faithfulness may be judged by the fact that during that time he has missed but one annual meeting and banquet. He has served two years on the Board of Directors, and was elected twice by acclamation as treasurer, an office held for two years.

He has well fulfilled his duties to the organization, and undoubtedly would make an enthusiastic president. Since he is living in Montreal he seems peculiarly well fitted for the office. He is a member of the Executive Council of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and also a member of the Montreal Board of Trade.

DO YOU WANT A NEW CUSTOMER?

A family resident in the United States are looking for some place to locate a summer home, and have asked the MacLean newspapers for advice. They want, they say, one in which they can live from May to November, preferably in Canada, near a lake, if possible, and within easy reach of good trout fishing, not nearer to a post office and telegraph station than twelve miles, nor farther than forty, not too far north to prevent the raising of vegetables for their own use. If they could find trout, partridge or pheasants and deer, elk or moose, each in its own season, so much the better. They desire to build a comfortable log house, and would need one for the man and his wife whom they would leave there the year round. The family is well known and highly respected in the public and social life in the United States, and in Great Britain, where they at one time had a temporary residence. Being also wealthy, they would become valuable customers for the retail trade in any locality where they may decide to settle. If any of our readers or Boards of Trade have a place that fills the requirements described above, will they kindly send particulars to the editor for transmission.

BUSINESS MEN FROM FRANCE.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has returned to Ottawa after a six months' leave of absence in Europe, with Hon. Mr. Fielding, conducting negotiations with the French Government for a new commercial treaty. As announced, the treaty has been signed and Hon. Mr. Brodeur, while unable to discuss the details before it is laid before the French and Canadian chambers, is sanguine that under it there will be a large commerce development between Canada and France.

Mr. Brodeur states that the Dominion is becoming better known in France, and that country has considerable respect for the manner in which Canadian advantages are advertised at international exhibitions, and for the manner in which Canadian products are marketed abroad. As an indication of the increasing interest which Frenchmen take in Canada, Mr. Brodeur stated that "Le Comite Republican du Commerce, de l'Industrie et de l'Agriculture," which is similar to the united chambers of commerce of Canada, will visit Canada next Summer. Last Summer the meeting was held in London during the time the Colonial Conference was going on and there were a hundred and fifty French representatives in London. Mr. Brodeur states that there will be as many representatives visit Canada next Summer. They will not only visit Montreal, but western Canada as well

Every dry goods store carries some notions, for the community cannot get along without a certain number of articles that come under this head—needles, pins, etc. As a matter of fact, too many merchants despise the small things. Five and ten cent articles, they argue, in effect, if not in fact, are not worth bothering about.

Do you ever size up the fact that you get a very good rate of profit from notions, better, in fact, than from some lines that you think of much greater importance and go to a great deal of trouble over? Do you ever realize that there are stores which make a fat living solely by selling 5c. and 10c. articles, the greater number of which are straight dry goods notions?

The man who started the first chain of ten cent stores realized that here was a line that was, comparatively speaking, neglected by the majority of retail merchants. It is really out of notions, and by applying modern selling methods to their distribution, that the 10c. man makes his profit, and just in the same manner, but not, perhaps, on such a large scale, can the dry goods merchant make his notion department a big money-maker.

Indications are that trade in the fancy goods section in retail establishments will be bigger than ever, in spite of the tight money situation. Preparations, at retail, are at present being made for the holiday trade. These preparations include the stocking of all lines of ladies' fancy leather goods, belts, leather bags, mesh bags, buckles, combs and Japanese fancy goods. Just now deliveries for holiday trade are coming along promptly and window displays will be in order shortly.

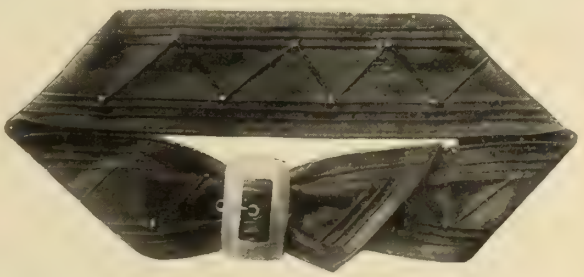
Leather Bags in Demand.

The trade in leather bags is active at present. It is expected to improve as Christmas draws near. A popular style shown is the regular bag shape with metal frame. The college, and also a large variety of vanity also finger-strap bags are to the fore. Fancy colors are not selling as well as formerly. The demand seems to be running on staple shades. Various grained leathers, such as morocco, seal and walrus, and also genuine morocco, seal, walrus, alligator and pig skin are shown in large variety. In novelty leathers velvet seal and velvet morocco are now strong favorites. The puffed alligator bag is also selling well. In very expensive lines the hornback alligator bag, made from the whole skin, heads and claws, are shown in one or two cases for the holiday trade. These bags, outside of being exceptionally pretty, are shown in useful shapes, and will retain their appearance indefinitely. They retail as high as $37.

The demand for mesh bags is only fair at the moment. The styles shown are gunmetal, gilt and silver. Retailers' price is from $1.50 to $10.

Buckles Active.

Buckles are selling better this Fall than ever. A lot of oriental effects, reproduced in the United States, are now finding favor here. There is also quite a feeling for cut steel buckles in which many effective designs are shown.



The Belt Trade.

An exceptionally good season in the belt trade is expected, especially in elastic trimmed with cut steel, as of late the plain leather belt has been largely worn and the public is now looking forward to something with more effect. The silk belt is coming into favor again. Some very pretty effects are shown. All kinds of leather belts will be strong. The soft, crushed styles are favored in staple shades.

The Fluffy Ruffle belt, while some time on the market, is still in good demand. This is a plain belt with, usually, five metal pieces at intervals, running from end to end. The two-inch width seems to have preference at the moment.

Comb Styles.

The comb trade continues a prosperous one with demand active on the better quality lines. Not so long ago it was the 25c. comb that the trade banked upon, whereas now it is the 50c., 75c. and the $1.00 combs that are the sellers. Nor is there any great persuasion necessary to sell attractive goods at higher prices. This is a fact that can be most strongly pressed when holiday buying is in progress, and merchants will do well to make a strong feature of these better lines. The brilliant-set comb will prove a good seller, also the plain and carved highback comb. There is also quite a feeling for cut steel. Engraved and plain combs, with brilliant mountings, are well to the front. Combs with carved jet tops are also to the fore.

Corded Gilt-Studded Leather Belt, with Pearl Buckle. Shown by Rhys. D. Fairbairn.

Among the novelties shown for the holiday trade, the high Spanish back comb is meeting with success. There is also quite a feeling for cut steel ornaments and initial combs. The holder comb is rapidly coming into prominence. The blacks are having an increased sale. Celuloid combs, with celluloid mountings, are among the novelties for Christmas.

The Fluffy Ruffle comb is also a novelty in the popular priced goods. This easily retails at 50c.

Japanese Fancy Goods.

Japanese fancy goods for the holiday trade are numerous. All lines are active. Initial orders are coming in, and everything is running smoothly. All lines, including lacquer ware, antimony novelties, fancy baskets, and tea sets are to the fore. A merchant cannot go wrong in handling this line of goods.

Among the Retail Associations

Secretary of the Ontario Organization says Retail Merchants have been the Softest Class of Men in the Country—Chatham Merchants Make a Good Move.

At the annual banquet of the Galt Retail Merchants' Association, Secretary Trowern, of the Ontario Association, was one of the speakers. He said that the retail merchants had been organized only a short time, but the membership had become very strong. It is strong enough to occupy a prominent place in Canadian affairs.

The retail merchants, Mr. Trowern continued, were paying the largest amount of taxes in the Dominion; they were the largest commercial body; owned more premises; employed more clerks; owned more horses; used more light, etc., than any other class in Canada. Yet in the past they had been the softest lot of men on the face of the earth, pulled here and there by everybody. In Montreal a tax was being placed on retail merchants, when someone suggested that it was too high, only to bring forth the remark that the merchants were the easiest to collect from. And such was really the case. The farmers, who are organized, go to Ottawa and demand certain legislation and they get it, so do the manufacturers and the labor men, simply because of organization. The retail merchants had not been getting anything simply because they had not asked for it. There was a live department of labor at Ottawa and yet the department of commerce was as dead as a herring. The department of agriculture was very much alive, all because those interested had got busy and made their demands in one body. The retail merchants must wake up and realize their importance. The association stood for all that was fair and right in retail commerce. Yet how were they to get retail laws if there was no organized body to present their claims to the Legislature. The Mayor of Galt was a good man in the right place, and yet his was one of the most thoroughly organized professions. If anyone elected men to office, it was the merchants. They stood behind their counters and met hundreds of people every day, and thus had an opportunity of boosting or knocking any candidate. What did the majority of the members of parliament know about retail commerce? It was the duty of the association to be in a position to lay before their representatives their claims in a clear manner, and then request them to see that they were justly treated. They could get nothing by going to parliament alone. The plan of the association was that if the merchants of Galt had an idea that certain legislation would be beneficial they should get together and send their plan to headquarters. If it was feasible it would be passed along to all the associations and eventually brought before Parliament backed by such a number of merchants that action would have to be taken. Last year all bills coming before Parliament had been carefully looked over at the headquarters of the association and several had been found that were detrimental to retail commerce. A strong deputation was at once sent to Ottawa, and succeeded in having these bills amended so as to be acceptable. One of the bills they had succeeded in having laid over was the Co-operative Societies Bill, which, if it became law, would surely ruin trade in Canada. The bill was coming up again next session, and he wanted every member of the association to write a personal letter to his representative in Parliament, opposing the bill, and in fact take such a decided stand that the bill would be thrown out for all time.

Mr. Trowern pointed to several reforms that the association was trying to secure, among them being the abolishment of the present system of inspection of weights and measures, whereby a merchant had to pay for having his scales and weights tested. He thought the cost should be born by the Government. Another reform desired was a law whereby merchants could collect their small accounts without spending the amount of the account or more in law costs.

Canada and Australia

Application of Canadian Government for Suspension of New Duties on Goods in Transit Refused.

D. H. Ross, Canadian commercial agent, writes from Melbourne, as follows: "Late on Aug. 8, the proposed new Australian tariff was introduced into the Commonwealth Parliament, and the new duties came into operation the following day. The Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, was promptly notified by cable of the principal increases in the duties in so far as they affected leading lines of Canadian exports to Australia. The tariff has been under parliamentary debate for about 10 days, but so far the review of the items has not been commenced. There are 444 items which—in many instances—are sub-divided under half a dozen or more headings. Ales, wines, spirits and tobaccos are responsible for 26 items, and free goods—unimportant to Canada—comprise a fair number of items. It is anticipated that it will take at least two to three months before the tariff will be finally settled.

Application for Suspension of Duties.

"Strong representations were made by the Canadian Government in requesting the Australian Government to suspend the operation of the new duties until such time as the goods in transit—when the new tariff was introduced—could be admitted under the old rates. Practically the same request was made by the British Government in regard to goods in transit from the United Kingdom, but, in both cases, the consideration asked for was refused. The Acting Prime Minister of the Commonwealth gave as his reason for declining the requests made by the British and Canadian Governments, that it was contrary to the precedent established by the Australian colonies prior to federation and followed when the first Commonwealth tariff came into operation.

Higher Customs Duties.

"Duties in the proposed Australian tariff now in operation—are in many cases doubled in comparison with previous rates. The schedule has many items varying from 30 to 45 per cent., and these duties are really higher than superficially expressed for the reason that the 10 per cent. is added to the invoiced value of the goods before the duty is computed thereon. Thus the Australian tariff rate of 5 per cent. becomes 5½ per cent. net, 7½ per cent. becomes 8¼ per cent., 10 per cent. becomes 11 per cent., 12½ per cent. becomes 13¾ per cent., 15 per cent.

becomes 16½ per cent., 17½ per cent. becomes 19¼ per cent., 20 per cent. becomes 22 per cent., 25 per cent. becomes 27½ per cent., 27½ per cent. becomes 30¼ per cent., 30 per cent. becomes 33 per cent., 35 per cent. becomes 38½ per cent., 40 per cent. becomes 44 per cent., 45 per cent. becomes 49½ per cent., 50 per cent. becomes 55 per cent. net.

Incidence of the Tariff on Canadian Coods.

"It is a remarkable fact that the duties proposed under the new customs tariff—and in the meantime in operation—are particularly heavy upon the principal lines of Canadian exports to Australia. The following examples may be quoted:

	General Tariff. Per cent.	Preferential Tariff U.K. Goods. Per cent.
Apparel and attire—wool or silk...	45	40
Apparel and attire—n.e.i.....	40	35
Apparel and attire—sundries.....	30	25
Denims—striped and fancy	35	30
Denims and Dungaree, n.e.i.....	10	5
Cotton piece goods, n.e.i.....	10	5
Wallpaper	20	15

Canadian Manufacturers and Exporters Criticized.

"As a result of several recent interviews with Melbourne importers of Canadian goods, I regret to report just grounds for the revival of the old complaint that manufacturers and exporters in the Dominion—some in a large way of business—are not extending due consideration to correspondence and orders received from distant Australia. One importer contrasted the replies received from United States and Canadian manufacturers when approached for information as to the lines they have to export. The former almost invariably sends catalogues and export (f.o.b.) prices of the goods he has to sell, whilst the Canadian frequently asks for further particulars of the inquirer's wants. This latter course is not appreciated for the following reasons:

(a) It is well known that both United States and Canadian manufacturers look upon export trade as an outlet for their surplus production of lines for which they already have a home market. If other sizes or descriptions are asked for, either high prices are demanded, or such a minimum quantity stipulated that business is frequently impracticable.

(b) The delay in obtaining definite information on which orders could be placed. Frequently a firm desires information in order to make up indent for seasonable goods, and write say nine months before the goods are wanted here. The reply asking for further particulars reaches him in say three months, and another two or three months must elapse before the second reply with prices reaches Australia. Thus only four months are left for the ordering, manufacturing and delivery here, which would rarely suffice to bring the goods in time for the season.

Slow Deliveries of Canadian Goods.

"The very slow delivery of orders placed with Canadian manufacturers is operating seriously against the development of trade with Australia. I am aware of orders having been sent from Melbourne to Canada in June, 1906, and no advices have yet been received that the goods are shipped. There are numbers of instances of indents accepted by manufacturers 9 to 10 months ago that were not, at latest advices, executed. Australian buyers may be obliged to accept delivery when the goods arrive, but they decline to send repeat orders on account of the uncertainty of delivery.

Cancellation of Indents for Canadian Goods.

"Several instances have been brought under my notice of Canadian manufacturers repudiating business contracts, obviously on account of an increase in demand and higher rates ruling elsewhere. Upon the basis of their own quotations some manufacturers notified Australian importers of their acceptance of orders, and the buyers, after anticipating the arrival of the goods from month to month, simply received a notification that the orders could not be filled at the prices upon which the orders were in the first instance accepted. Such treatment is most reprehensible as it reflects upon the good name of all Canadian exporters, who are endeavoring to secure a larger share of the Australian trade."

OLD COUNTRY COTTON MEN HERE.

The various branches of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association have made arrangements for the reception and entertainment of a party of English cotton spinners now touring the cotton growing and manufacturing districts of the United States.

TO ADVERTISE SIMCOE.

The Simcoe organization has appointed a "Boom Committee," whose duty it will be to advertise the town as a favorable location for manufacturers. The sum of $467 has been subscribed toward the scheme, and this amount will likely be supplemented by a grant from the City Council, which body may take over the plan and work it out.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST BUILDING.

In the new 49-storey Singer building at New York there wil be many uncommon features for the comfort of tenants. In every office will be installed an individual suction air brush, connected with the vacuum cleaning system, by means of which dust may be removed in an easy and sanitary manner from one's hat and clothing. Fifteen thousand incandescent electric lights, sufficient, engineers say, to light a town of 25,000 inhabitants, will illuminate the rooms and hallways for late office workers. Every floor of the building will be readily and quickly accessible by means of sixteen newly-designed electric traction elevators, each having a speed of 600 feet per minute, and of the safest type known to the ablest engineers of to-day.

Fall Underwear Situation

Retailers have Only Just Received Stocks—No Deceiving the Public as to the Nature of the Advances.

There has been some complaint about the tardy manner in which deliveries have been made, and it is only in the past week or so that the retail trade has been in possession of its full Fall line. This complaint is safe to be more or less heard all through the Fall and Winter season, as the mills are sold up to their capacity. The difficulties experienced in obtaining the necessary skilled labor is also a retarding factor, and labor troubles threaten, with some mills, to lessen the season's production. A continuance for a time of the present open weather would be a help to the manufacturing end of the trade.

The retail trade is now in possession of a full line of Fall goods. Notwithstanding the fact that the advances are very apparent, this has had no appreciable effect upon counter sales. Though there is no particular rush, a steady and increasing business is in progress. Window displays of both men's and women's knitted underwear have been made a feature of the month, and there has also been a sprinkling of more or less genuine bargain events advertised to set goods moving in this department.

Though standard prices are maintained by most of the retail firms, when qualities come to be examined the heavy price advances are very apparent. Not only have weights suffered, but the admixture of cotton is greater in union goods. More heavy cotton garments are shown in the lower lines.

There is no disguising the fact from the buying public that values are not the same as they were a year ago. The poorest shopper must be aware of the fact. Therefore the wise merchant will make a virtue of necessity, take the public into his confidence, and state plainly the situation. Not only will he do this in his advertising matter, but he will supply his selling staff with the necessary talking points. This is a thing that many buyers and merchants never seem to think of doing. Consequently the salespeople are not able to handle the situation effectively. Some of them don't know and don't care, and give only a vacant stare, when asked for reasons, while others are embarrassed, and get out as well as possible without making any definite statement. There is no danger in telling the truth regarding the situation, for all buyers are in the same box. Possibly, here and there, a merchant may have some carried-over stock, and may be using this stuff as a lead. Such a condition supplies, however, only an incident. The man who tells the truth of the situation and states plainly that his garments are not as good for the money as last year, and who gives truthful and convincing reasons why, is the one who is going to retain the confidence of his clientele. There is nothing to be gained by shouting bargains and values that cannot be given.

Fancy Knit Goods

Good Business to be Done on These Lines During Holiday Season — Infants' and Sporting Goods Brisk Sellers.

The merchant who does not provide a selection of novelties in this department is neglecting a profitable opportunity, as these goods always sell well at this season of the year.

Infants' goods—little jackets, boottees, gaiters, mitts, etc.—are particularly good articles to feature. They make dainty and at the same time useful and acceptable presents.

Now that the season of Winter sports is at hand, sweaters, wool jackets, etc., are sure to be sellers. A novelty that will appeal to many is the new knitted pony coat. This handsome garment is shaped on exactly the same lines as the popular cloth coat that goes by this name, and comes in a variety of fancy stitches that are difficult to tell from hand work.

There is a variety of other interesting lines, such as toques, vests, protectors, knitted skirts, etc.

Hosiery

No Particular Rush, But Steady Retail Selling in Progress—Big Demand for Fancy Hose.

Steady selling is in progress in the hosiery departments of the retail stores, and the effects of this selling are already becoming evident in the jobbing houses. There is some complaint by the latter about the way in which deliveries are made, but it is conceded that manufacturers are doing their utmost to ship goods on time. Though qualities are decidedly poor, there is little kick on that account as under present conditions this is regarded as unavoidable.

Blacks, for street wear, are in the lead, and there is a good inquiry for tans in the city stores, as tan footwear is certain to be a factor in the Fall and early Winter's trade. There is also sure to be a big demand for tans and browns with the advent of early Spring.

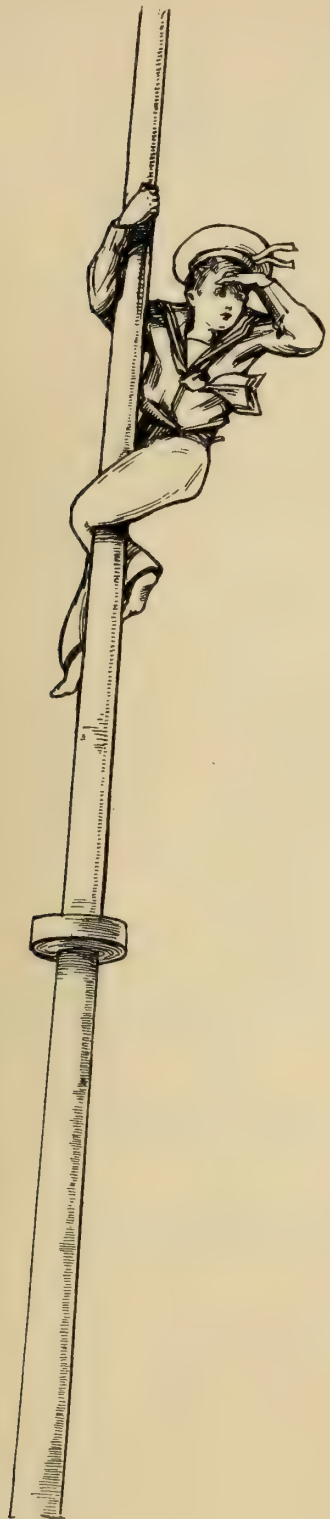
For house and evening wear, colors and weights in hosiery are practically the same as those that have been selling all Summer. This ought to be of material help to the department, as it means one continuous season all the year round, on this class of goods.

All Fall showings emphasize the fact that fancy effects in hosiery have captured the trade. Where a few years back only blacks and a few tans, in cotton, lisle and silk, or in wool and cashmere, according to season, were all that were required, at the present time there is a large list of fancy colors and fancy effects stocked. In fancy effects, embroidered goods certainly head the list. These come in small neat patterns, for the most part worked out in both self and subdued contrasting colors. For the holiday trade, some very handsome goods are now being shown.

Customers in the retail stores seem to be pretty well posted as to the price situation, and the best selling lines are those above 25c., with 35c., or three pairs for a dollar, as the popular line. Merchants generally seem to be making special efforts to give good values at this price. This is good policy, as the little price concession is a strong inducement to the buying of three pairs instead of one. Fifty cents and seventy-five cents are the leading prices in fancy hosiery. All goods under these figures show the deterioration in quality, occasioned by the heavy advances in raw material, so clearly, that customers find it profitable to pay the 5c. or 10c. extra for the better grade. Salespeople should be instructed in the present price situation, and should be given all the talking points necessary to enlighten customers as to the wisdom of buying the better goods. This will prevent the passing over of the home store and the sending away for goods because of the poor wearing quality of hose purchased.

Revised Size Scale



Now Under Consideration by the Dry Goods Association and the United States Mills.

The committee of the National Dry Goods Association, the organization of the United States jobbers, have for some time been engaged in a general revision of the size scale for knitted underwear. An endeavor is being made to arrive at a scale of measurements that shall be satisfactory to both buyer and seller. The scale given below is the result of their labors, and is the one that, subject to some revision, probably, will be finally adopted.

There's No Shrink in It

Of course Stanfield's Underwear is guaranteed unshrinkable.

But, better than that, it is unshrinkable.

The shrink is taken out of the wool before it is woven—so that the finished garment can't shrink.

Stanfield's is the underwear that you may personally guarantee—and know that it will live up to everything you say.

In all sizes to suit all figures, and all weights to suit all climates.

Sizes on flat goods scale are based on 1-1 rib goods of Winter weight and a stretch of 25 per cent. in width is allowed. This allowance may be increased up to 30 per cent. as the goods run lighter in weight, or decreased with more rigid fabrics.

"All waist measurements are for pants and drawers with non-elastic bands, and not vests and shirts."

"Trunk measurements are for union suits only."

*Sleeve length is based on a garment not cut out at the shoulder. Where this is done the sleeve must be lengthened accordingly.

Where the front and back rise from the inseam to top of band are made the same they must both be the same length as the back rise as here given, and not one-half the sum of the front and back.

WATERLOO KNITTING CO.

A Dominion charter has been granted the Waterloo Knitting Company, Carleton Place, with a capital of $250,000, divided in $100 shares. The incorporators were Adolphe F. Savaria, manufacturer; Benoit A. Charlebois, bookkeeper; Theodore Meunier, insurance agent, of the town of Waterloo, Quebec; Sylva Dore, accountant, and Rosario Genest, advocate, of Montreal.

The objects of the company are: "To manufacture cotton, linen, silk, wool and other threads, fabrics and other manufactures, articles and goods composed in whole or part of cotton, flax, hemp, silk, wool or other material: to carry on the trade or business of manufacturing, producing, adapting, preparing, buying and selling, and otherwise dealing in woolen and worsted goods, and other fabrics, and to manufacture, produce, purchase, adapt, prepare, use, sell, or otherwise deal in any materials, articles or things required for, in connection with, or incidental to, the manufacture, use, purchase, sale of, or other dealing in woolen and worsted goods and other fabrics, and generally to carry on any manufacturing business which is germane to the above."

MITCHELL MILLS EXTENDING.

A bylaw was passed by the ratepayers of Mitchell, Ont., to grant Dufton & Waterhouse a loan of $10,000 to enable them to increase their plant for the manufacture of underwear. They agree to pay back the principal, without interest, in nine annual instalments, the first payment to be made inside of two years. There were 322 votes for and 19 against the bylaw.

CANADA EXPORTING MORE.

Canada's trade figures for September show a large increase of exports over September of last year. The imports for September totalled $28,397,160, an increase of $1,176,794 over September of last year. Exports for the month amounted to $27 322 977, an increase of $3,340,564, the total duty collected during the six months being $31,052,801, an increase of $5,655,240.

Mr. Huskey went into a chemist's shop and bought a bottle of patent stuff, which was advertised thus: "No more coughs. No more colds. 1s 1½d the bottle." Three days later he went to the chemist, complaining that his throat was stopped up, and that he could scarcely breathe. "I've drunk all that patent cough mixture, and I'm no better."

"Drunk it? Why, that's an indiarubber solution to put on the soles of your boots!"

A Review of Jap Silk Conditions

The Questions of Varying Qualities and Short Weights—The Need of Standardization—Number of Interesting Points Discussed at Some Length.

The silk trade of Japan is a domestic industry. In the cultivation of the mulberry tree, in hatching the eggs, and in feeding the worms, whilst they spin the cocoon, there were in 1904 as many as 1,474,567 households employed. The numbers are increasing every year. The whole industry, in all stages, from growing the mulberry tree and rearing the worms to the manufactured article is nearly entirely what may be described as a peasant and domestic industry, with the exception that in certain districts the filatures or reeling establishments employ foreign machinery. The trade increases yearly. New districts are continually being devoted to the growth of the mulberry tree, and soon there will be few districts in Japan without the cultivation of the silkworm.

Silk is largely used in Japan for dress, both by men and women. The quantity required for home consumption is considerable, on account of the variety of purposes to which it is put, besides articles of dress. Notwithstanding this large home consumption, the exports increase yearly, and last year the value exported in the raw and manufactured state approximated to £15,000,000. It is exported in a variety of fabrics, principally that known as Habutai. It is also exported largely in the raw state in the form of reeled silk, as cocoons, and also as waste silk. Of the raw silk exported, it is a remarkable fact that the United States take about three-quarters of the whole export, whereas Europe takes only a quarter. This seems anomalous, and it has been said to be due to America's strong Protection. But various countries in Europe—as France, Switzerland, Italy and Germany—have also Protection, possibly, however, not in the same degree. This is clearly a matter worthy of discussion. Why should America be able to consume three times as much of Japanese silk in the raw state as all Europe? Approximately, the amount of raw silk exported from July 1, 1905, to March 1, 1906, was as follows: To America, 47,887 bales; to Europe, 17,762 bales.

The Various Qualities of the Silk.

So far as the drapery trade is concerned, the manufactured cloth known as Japanese Habutai is of most interest. The various producing districts in Japan, known as provinces, are similar divisions of land to our shires. The manufactured article, Habutai, acquires the name of the district or province in which it is manufactured; thus, Echizen, Echigo, Uzen, Kaga, Mikawa, and Izumo, etc. In the same way in England, cheese is known by the name of the county in which it is made, as Cheshire, Gloucester, Derbyshire, and Leicester. In quoting Jap silk goods, they are styled Echizen, Kaga, etc., and those in the business at once know their relative values accordingly.

There is a town in each district, similar to our county towns, where there is what is called an "Inspection Bureau." This appears to be a kind of conditioning house. All goods made in that district or province are brought here, examined, and stamped with the quality and weight. The number of mommes each piece weighs is stamped thereon. A momme is a Japanese weigh equal to 2.12 drams English avoirdupois. It appears that the weight stamped by the "Inspection Bureau" gives the silk a commercial value and status. In fact, it appears to change hands in Japan on that basis.

The various qualities are known by the weights, as 4, 4½, 5, 5½, 6, 6½ mommes, etc., up to 20 mommes. These various qualities are so slightly different that, in a piece 36 inches wide and nearly 50 yards long, there will only be about 3 ounces in weight difference from quality to quality. The pieces seldom, if, ever, measure 50 yards. They are generally about 49¾ yards. A little reflection must show any reasonable person that it would be almost a human impossibility to manufacture 49¾ yards of a fine silk cloth of 36 inches width so that each piece be exactly alike in weight. The fine silk threads will of necessity vary in thickness. Experience proves this expectation to be correct, the pieces varying considerably in weight.

The Question of Short Weight.

For each quality a standard weight is fixed, and the goods are bought and sold in Japan on that average basis. In exporting piece goods, they are made up in cases of 50 pieces each. It has been the endeavor of the packers so to select goods by weight that, some being under the standard weight and others being over the standard weight, they will average the standard weight. In case of a deficiency an allowance is made accordingly. I will give an illustration of a case that came under my observation.

The standard weight of the width and quality in question should be 234 mommes per piece. Out of the 50 pieces in the case in question there were only two pieces of the standard weight of 234 mommes each.

The short-weight pieces were as follows:

14	pieces of	225	mo.	each, being	9	mo. short	.....	126

The short weight, therefore, was nearly 2 per cent. In this case, naturally, the matter would be adjusted by the wholesale buyer getting an equivalent allowance; that is, I suppose, if he put forward his claim.

A Retail Buyer's Grievance.

So far as the retail drapery trade is concerned, who buy only odd pieces, irrespective of weight, there is an example here of a palpable anomaly that is of every-day occurrence. As will be seen by looking at the weights of this typical case (which, I am informed, is really a type of goods delivered regularly), some few persons will receive pieces slightly over weight, whilst the majority

Store of Sellers, Gough Fur Co., Toronto.

Cold Storage and Fur-Lined Garment Department—Sellers, Gough Fur Co., Toronto.

will receive under weight. In passing, I wish to observe that I do not believe that goods regularly average 2 per cent. short.

The wholesale buyer, in dealing with these 50 pieces of a great variety of weights, without regard to lengths, is acting quite bona fide in the matter, inasmuch as each piece has cost him an equal amount; that is, providing he gets his average standard weight. It would appear there is an opening here for an enterprising wholesaler who would sell each piece per standard weight, making an allowance when they do not come up to the standard. Such a firm would acquire the confidence of the buyers to a greater degree than others, with a consequently increased turnover.

Many buyers who have handled large quantities of Japanese Habutai dering the last five or six years are of opinion that the quality has, speaking generally, depreciated considerably. They state that goods sold to-day as first choice goods are, in many cases, no better than goods formerly sold as second choice goods.

Is the Silk Deteriorating in Quality.

This opinion seems to be confirmed by actual facts inasmuch as one seldom, if ever, sees second choice goods offered. The reverse ought to be the case, because the manufacture has extended enormously in all directions. As the manufacture extends, new hands have to be employed to learn the business, so that a certain proportion either of the silk or the weaving will not be so good as formerly. Therefore, there should be more second-choice goods than ever. What becomes of the second-choice goods? Who is responsible for placing the first-choice tickets on goods? It is an admitted fact that goods often sold to-day as first are nothing better than formerly sold as second choice. Are the "Inspection Bureaux" responsible? If so, are they to be relied upon for the weights? Are they to be trusted to put on each piece the weight at which it is to be sold? Should these goods be bought subject only to the examination and scrutiny of a Japanese conditioning house, over which we in England have no control? Or should they also pass through an English conditioning house, over which we have control? It is quite impracticable to sell these silks by weight without their passing through a conditioning house, because of the absorption or loss of moisture whilst they are in different conditions of atmosphere.

A Fixed Standard of Quality Needed.

Having given a brief sketch of the silk industry of Japan, and raised a few questions for consideration, permit me to give my opinion on several points raised. I am of opinion that:

1. The weight stamped on each piece in mommes by the various "Inspection Bureaux" will be found correct, and if the goods went through an English conditioning house they would return equivalent English weights.

2. That the first-choice tickets are affixed by the merchants shipping the goods.

3. That in this business there are merchants of other nationalities besides Japanese engaged. That, as it will be found that in any trading community there are various opinions of what is right and wrong, so in this silk business each firm has its own standard of what they consider first choice. That this standard varies with different firms; hence the reason some goods stamped first choice are approximately as good as ever shipped under that designation, whilst others are similar to what formerly were shipped as second choice goods.

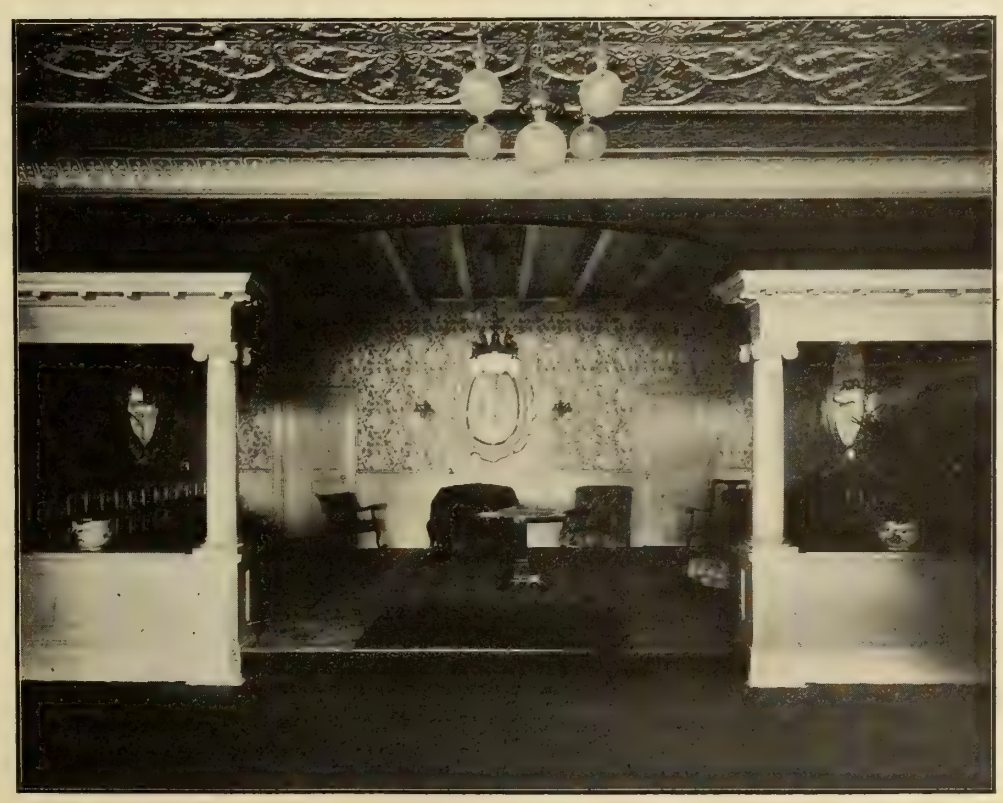
4. That as in all business communities, of whatever nationality, there are firms of different degrees of probity, so also in this business; hence the possibility of goods being shipped not up to the average standard weight.

Short Weight Should Not Become a Custom.

I remember many years ago having my attention called to a dispute of ½ per cent. short weight. It was then alleged that no shipper would guarantee to ½ per cent. Some years later I had my attention called to a dispute, and in this case it was alleged that no importer would guarantee to 1 per cent. This year I have even heard it asserted that no shipper would guarantee to 2 per cent. of standard weight. This shows the importance of habitual exactitude in examining and accepting goods received, because any departure from the standard of weight or quality makes a precedent. Precedent succeeds precedent until a custom is established, and custom becomes law. In all three cases, during a period of many years, when it was alleged that it was quite correct to deliver goods at ½ or 1 or 2 per cent. under the average, no show of reason could be assigned; it was simply said it was custom.

Every wholesale buyer can do something to benefit his fellow-buyers by insisting on exactitude in weight and quality. If every buyer did that, we would prevent short weight becoming a custom—Drapers' Record.

THE JAPANESE SILK TRADE.



Mr. Harrington, Acting Commercial Attache at the British Embassy at Tokio, writing of the silk trade, says that silk exports during 1906 amounted to £16,124,603 or over 37 per cent. of the total exports of the country. The increase on the previous 12 months was no less than £4,542,135. The activity was especially noticeable during the latter half of the year, when the Japan trade, despite competition from European silks, enjoyed both good sales and good prices. As regards raw silk, the season was a good one, and the demand as the year went on increased to such an extent as to send prices to a very high figure. The total value of the raw silk exported during the twelve months was £11,274,369, as against £7,334,050 in the previous year. Of the total of 102,187 bales exported, no less than 73,050 went to America. Manufactured silks showed a great advance both in quantity and value. Prices generally advanced throughout the year, marking a continually increasing demand. Habutai silk was responsible for the largest increase, rising from £2,864,252 to £3,345,120, though the latter figures were less than those in 1904. In the case of Echizen Habutai, the quality is stated to have somewhat deteriorated owing to the high price of raw material necessitating the use of inferior silk. Kagas and Kawamattas were reported to have maintained their quality, but in the case of Habutai generally the complaint still exists that the official inspection is insufficient, leading to a lowering of the standard. In the case of silk handkerchiefs there was a considerable improvement both in quantity and value, but it was stated that they would have been still higher had it not been for the advance in the cost of Habutai. Kaiki showed a decline in quantity and value exported; this, however, was in the case of silk and cotton mixture, whole-silk Kaiki showing an advance from £15,400 to £24,223.

CANADIAN GOODS IN AUSTRALIA.

J. V. Larke, Canadian commercial agent, writes as follows from Sydney, Australia: "The importations under the head of apparel and textiles, have shown an increase in every branch of the trade. The importations from Canada were £21,150 in 1905, as against £24,831 last year, a fair increase in percentage. If the Canadian mills were able to supply a larger quantity of piece goods, the market would have taken them."

THE WESTERN SITUATION.

It is now possible to estimate pretty accurately the business situation in Western Canada. The boomster reports circulated by supposedly well informed papers, placing the crops as high as 115,000,000 bushels of wheat, and the alarming stories circulated so industriously by the crop-killers, to the effect that the entire crop was ruined, have proved alike misleading. The crop is smaller than last year, but the prices are so much higher that it is now pretty generally conceded that the net value is about the same as last year. Some districts—notably the Portage Plains—have the best crops in years and the lucky farmers and business men in these localities are gathering in large profits; in others the wheat is badly frosted and in some districts it must be admitted that the crop has been almost a complete failure. But taking the country as a whole the net amount received for the grain grown this year will be quite as large as the amount received for the crop of 1906.

As intimated above, the crop is very uneven, and in some places the farmers and business men are hit hard. It does not help the business man in one of the frost-bitten districts of Saskatchewan to know that the business men in some of the Manitoba districts are selling goods to farmers who are now marketing the most profitable crop in years. He is up against hard times himself, and prosperity in another district can help him only indirectly.

However, the worst is now known, and that worst is much better than was expected a few weeks ago. In common with other countries, Western Canada has come through an unfavorable year and she has come through it well. That so large a crop has been harvested under such adverse circumstances is the best possible advertisement for the country.

One happy result has been a general shortening of credits. The general financial stringency, coming at a time when there was so much uncertainty as to the crop outlook in Western Canada, made it necessary for the wholesale houses to go after collections in determined fashion, and this pressure has forced a general shortening of credit by the retail stores. For two or three years there has been a movement among western merchants towards a system of cash sales or monthly payments, and the pressure of the wholesale houses this year has greatly facilitated this movement. This has been one of the beneficial results of an unsatisfactory year.

THE SURTAX ON GERMAN GOODS.

Negotiations will probably be opened next year, aiming to establish reciprocal trade relations between Canada and Germany. If carried through, this would mean the removal of the surtax; in fact, it is said the idea is the admission of German goods under the intermediate tariff.

In the dry goods trade the manufacturers of laces and braids, fancy knitted goods, hosiery, mantle cloths and dress goods would be hard hit by the lowering of duties on similar goods of German make. The importation of some lines from England would also be cut off.

In conversation with The Review, a manufacturer of fancy knitted goods said that his business practically owed its existence to the surtax. "We will have to shut down if it is taken off. Our staff now numbers about two hundred and fifty hands, and we could easily use fifty more. If present tariff conditions were assured we would immediately start to manufacture our own worsted yarns. The Germans make the same class of goods as we do, but their labor is more plentiful and very much cheaper. Several men whom we imported to act as foremen, and to whom we pay four dollars a day, were unable to earn more than thirty cents a day in Germany.

"Upon what grounds," he asked, "can it be argued that Canada would gain by the proposed arrangement? Of course Germany was formerly a big purchaser of our agricultural products; but surely the country is not crying out just now for an extended market in this respect.

We have plenty of customers, under excellent conditions, for everything we can produce, so that point may be dropped from consideration as one having little weight on the question at issue. Statesmen may claim that the principle of our attitude toward Germany is bad. Even if it is, the fact will afford little consolation to us if the intermediate tariff goes into effect with respect to that country's products. We must not be sacrificed to satisfy an ethical point."

If it is found that the removal of the surtax would benefit Canada as a whole, it will be removed. The effect which this would have on Canadian industry must be closely studied by the Government before any action is taken. Some manufacturers would undoubtedly suffer heavily, and they should see that the facts are laid before the Minister of Finance. So far as practicable our industries deserve protection against the competition of countries where the cost of production is only a fraction of what it is here.

PARCELS POST IN U. S.

A progressive policy has been outlined by Postmaster-General Meyer, who recently took charge of the United States Postal Department. The parcels post problem has for years been a fighting issue between the retail merchants and the large mail order house interests, and in outlining a policy of progression, Mr. Meyer has shown a capacity to deal with this problem in a broad and somewhat novel manner.

The mail order people have pointed out that they are now called upon to pay 16 cents per pound on parcels delivered within the United States, while the rate across the seas to foreign countries has been only 12 cents per pound. Mr. Meyer has admitted that a reform is needed, and will recommend to Congress that the domestic rate be reduced to meet the foreign rate, so that 12 cents will carry a parcel to any point in the States as well as to a foreign address. He will further recommend that the limit of weight for such parcels be increased from 4 to 11 pounds, that local parcels posts equipped with wagons or automobiles be established in cities where the free delivery system prevails, and that a special parcels post system with an extremely low charge for service be established in connection with the rural free delivery. Mr. Meyer says :

"If my recommendations are adopted, it will cost twelve cents a pound for the mail order house to send parcels to the rural delivery patron from any city post office, while for delivery from the distributing office of the rural route, or if mailed by a patron of any rural route for delivery to a patron on the same route, or at the distributing office of said route, the charge will be but five cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound, up to eleven pounds, or 25 cents for a package weighing eleven pounds. I will also recommend a postal savings bank system and the adoption of postal notes."

This is certainly a novel solution of the problem. Concessions are made to the retail merchants, as well as to the catalogue houses, and if the retailers adopt modern advertising and business methods, it is probable that they can retain the advantage given the local dealer of a specially low rate for short distance parcels. The members of retail associations, however, are suspicious of the present proposal, and are not giving it a cordial support. If there is a mailed fist behind the gloved hand, its presence has not yet been shown, but fears are expressed that the special rates given local retailers are likely to be of short duration, the mail order houses being willing to allow this concession to be made to disarm the opposition of the retail merchants, their intention being to come forward at the last moment with an amendment providing that the reduced rate apply on all domestic matter.

In the light of past experience it will be well for the retailers of the United States to be on their guard against the sharp tricks of the mail order people, but it must be generally admitted that, if left unchanged, the recommendation of Postmaster-General Meyer is an intelligent effort to solve the problem of an improved parcels post system, the details being fair to both retailers and mail order merchants.

A CASE OF HOLD-UP.

If the citizens of some town in Ontario or Quebec want to build a hospital, is there any good reason why manufacturers and wholesalers in Toronto and Montreal should be expected to contribute? A plain request from the people handling the project might bring a great many good wishes, but it is certain that there would be little else. They know this and suit their plan of action accordingly. A circular letter is drawn up, and to their own solicitation is added that of local merchants who buy goods from the firms addressed. The retailer is afraid to withhold his support of the scheme, for he is probably called on by several of his best customers. Hold-up No. 1. The manufacturer feels that if he refuses to donate he will offend the retailer. Hold-up No. 2.

How long is this sort of thing to be tolerated? The Review believes that if manufacturers and wholesalers would take a firm stand the great majority of retailers would be well pleased. The latter surely do not believe that the practice is a fair one.

The following letter was received not long ago by a number of firms:

"The ladies of the town of Welland are now engaged in forming plans for holding a large Fair of Nations (including Italian, Japanese, United States, Canadian, English, Irish and Scotch booths, and Wonderland), in October 1907. The object they have in view is to raise money in aid of the Hospital, which is to be built at once in this rapidly growing manufacturing centre. Welland has increased in population, etc., about 100 per cent. in the past year, and with so many manufactories now running, and in process of building, a hospital has become an absolute necessity. The ladies also feel that manufacturers and wholesale people can advertise their wares, and, at the same time, render assistance to a worthy cause, by sending a donation of their goods to this Fair. Will you kindly help?"

To each one sent out a Welland merchant was asked to append this line: "Compliance with the above request of the ladies will favor us."

The Fall Colors

Purple Losing Ground—The many Blue and Brown Shades the Leading Colors—Empire Green much in Evidence.

As predicted when the season commenced, purple is by no means so prominent. The all-purple hat is so little worn as to be very noticeable when worn on the street. Purple, combined with other colors, is fairly good. Purple and mauve shades enter into many of the best color blendings seen in feathers and flowers.

Brown and blue, in their many shades, are certainly the leading colors of the season. Often they are combined in the one color scheme. Brown and blue is popular in the shot silks, ribbons and velvets so much used, and brown is used to trim blue, and vice versa. Tans and leather shades are very much worn. The latest shade of this class is termed blondine. This is a pale yellowish tan that promises well. Other browns are golden, wood, cinnamon, copper, etc. There is a long list of blues, chiefly on the fancy order. The nattier blues head the list. Other blues are vieux, moonlight, gris, porcelain, Copenhagen, peacock, etc. The Burgundy shades are eclipsed by the claret order of wines, and in the red shades cardinal, combined with black, has made its appearance. The leading green undoubtedly is Empire, which is chiefly used as a trimming color in combination with black, brown and some of the darker shades of blue.

Predictions made earlier in the season indicated the all-black hat, and also the hat of white and pale shades as a later development. The white hat in felt, fur and beaver, trimmed either with black and white, or white lace, plumes and maline, with often a touch of gold or silver embroidery, has arrived. Pale blue felts, or velvets, with various trimmings are often seen, but as yet neither the black hat or the pale pink hat has attained any particular prominence.

Trimmings and Materials

Velvets, Ribbons and Fancy Feathers the leading Trimmings—Developing Interest in Shots for the late Winter and early Spring—Malines back in old position in Spring.

Velvet is used both as a hat covering and as a trimming this Fall, and is only rivaled in the profusion in which it is used by ribbons and fancy feathers.

The demand is insistent for wide, soft makes of ribbons. The fashionable bows take yards in making up. Many of the hats worn by young women and misses are wholly trimmed with massed loops of ribbon encircling and concealing the crown. Indeed, ribbons are more popular than ever, and their vogue is increasing. The latest call is for shot effects. Shots will sell, it is believed, for the balance of the Winter, and also for trimming the early Spring hat.

There is a perfect furore for fancy feathers, and practically every combination the manufacturer can produce is selling. Branching effects, large pom-poms, etc., in coque and ostrich, are the leaders, and the colors and combinations are endless. Fluffy aigrettes and down plumes are also used. Fancy wings and quills complete the collection.

Though the extreme willow plumes have moderated their length, ostrich is extravagantly used, and many plumes decorate one model, and nothing but plumes form the trimming of some hats.

Maline is back again as a Winter trimming, and promises to be good as ever for the Spring season. The latest idea is to use maline puffs as a bandeau trimming. Maline is utilized in combination with fur and lace for mid-Winter models.

Feathers have this season distanced flowers and fruit in the race for pre-eminence. Nevertheless, velvet flowers have sold remarkably well. Roses and dahlias are the favorites. Bunches of grapes, in tempting clusters, are fairly good. The prominence of violet shades is influencing the sale of violets. The fancy is for large double

PARIS FASHION NOTES FROM DEBENHAMS.

In millinery the large bell shapes with high crowns continue to be quite the thing; within the last few days these have come out in long-haired beaver. Feathers for trimming, especially rich, long ostrich plumes in all shades, also velvet roses, pansies and dahlias.

The eminence and violet shades are no longer much used by the best people, but Mordore, vieux blue, gris, elephant, vert bouteille, mousse, grenat and chaudronare are very good, also tan.

For dresses, navy blue serge is much to the fore, also stripes and checks in dark colors; plain cloths as much as ever in the above-mentioned shades as well as cerise A very striking novelty is a plain cloth with a printed chevron stripe in dark shades.

For evening, mousseline-ninon, cachemire de soie, and quantities of nets and tulles, with a good deal of handsome embroideries and laces, especially filet effects and embroidered filet.

The principal trimming for day dresses continues to be braids, also a few Japanese embroidered effects.

An attempt is being made to bring in borders, and appears to be successful.

The Changing Mode

As the Season Advances new Tendencies Develop—Shapes not so Pronounced as Earlier—Large Hats still lead, but an increasing interest taken in Smaller Shapes.

The huge, extreme shapes shown at the openings have had their day, and while the leading shapes, particularly for dressy wear, are still of good size, more medium and small shapes are showing than when the season opened. The short-fronted cloche, with the medium back, and well-balanced right and left, is the best selling hat of the season. For the early trade these have been chiefly of felt. Now, covered shapes of taffeta, ottoman, moire and velvet are coming to the fore. Velvet is the chief trimming material, and velvet bindings characterize almost all brims.

R. C. WILKINS
Candidate for President D. C. T. A.

A new fancy is the leaving of the edges of trimming materials raw. Thus a draped crown seen lately had alternate folds of velvet and silk, the folds finishing with raw-edged points. Lately imported hats have the crowns draped round with trimmings of raw-edged velvet. Another fashion that is coming back is the draping of the bandeaux with velvet.

Particularly in fur hats, which promise well, small shapes are coming to the front. The Marquise, worn with the turned-up portion of the brim in front, is the most noticeable development in fur models. This shape is greatly favored in mink and ermine. The trimming covers the crown. Orange plumes are used with the mink, and lace, ostrich tips and osprey with ermine.

Hats of velvet and fur, the brim of one and the crown of the other, are good style. Flowers are the usual trimming, such as roses, dahlias, orchids, etc Small mushroom shapes are covered with mink, squirrel or ermine. The crowns are swathed with folds of maline, either in brown, grey or white, and fancy breasts, ostrich plumes, or osprey, or a bunch of roses, dahlias or other flowers constitute the trimming.

CANADA'S LINEN IMPORTS.

Notwithstanding the general stringency of money throughout Canada, business continues to expand in a remarkable degree, and not a few British industries are benefiting largely, says the Drapers' Record. The linen trade, for instance, is said to have exported for the first six months of this year nearly 6,000,000 yards more than in the same period of last year, and at advanced prices. Indeed, since Canada granted a preference in favor of the British manufacturer the linen trade has increased with great rapidity, and happily, too, without incurring any very serious losses by bad debts. It is feared, however, that as the harvesting time comes round money will become more stringent, and will remain so until after the crops have been handled. It is said that in some of the Provinces traders have had to pay as high as 7½ per cent. for discounting, and business has accordingly been hindered. The crops, however, are generally good, but the season will be late.

New York Mode

Fashions of the Present are Decidedly Ultra—Purple, the Leading Color for Millinery and Yellow for Gowns—Jet Jewelry and Pearl Ear-Rings.

What New York Women are Wearing

Hats, Gowns, Jewelry, Footwear, and Veilings.

New York, Oct. 24.

New York has once more arrayed itself in gala attire. The city is thronged with visitors, and with its own people home again from seaside and mountains. The clear, crisp Autumn air has brought out the Winter millinery and dresses we have been admiring in shop windows and interiors, and even furs have been pressed into service by many of the fashionables. Although the day was bright and beautiful, and could not, by the wildest stretch of the imagination, be called cold, many furs were noted yesterday, worn especially by women in motors or carriages, and not a few fur-trimmed hats have been worn for the past week or two.

Coats of caracul, pony and broadtail promise to be extremely popular, these skins being as compared to mink and sable, inexpensive. One of the smartest Fifth Avenue shops is showing sealskin in many delightful combinations. A particularly striking model was a short, rather shapeless jacket of sealskin, trimmed with collar, cuffs and a vest effect of leather-colored broadcloth, handsomely embroidered with gold. Chamois skin was introduced on another smart model, and so it goes. There seems to be no end of the combinations one sees in which fur and cloth mingle, and as there is a decided rage for embroidered effects, the cloth is usually treated in this manner. In spite of many predictions to the contrary, muffs are still very large and flat, some being square, but the majority are pillow-shaped. With the Empire styles, which are at their zenith, it would seem as if the old-fashioned, perfectly round muffs would be in more favor, but they are rarely seen. Unquestionably fur will play a prominent part in the season's millinery. Already you have had one exquisite mink-trimmed hat illustrated from New York, or more correctly speaking, from Paris via. New York. As crowns are of enormous size, broad as well as high, fur will be used, not only to trim, but to form the entire crown. Mink and ermine are, so far, the most in demand for this purpose, mink being most in evidence. Then, too, a band of fur may be introduced about an inch back from the brim edge with very pleasing effect.

The hats are almost absurdly large. Indeed, on many people, one is quite safe in saying the majority are altogether absurd. You will notice in the photographs how elaborately the hair is arranged. This is absolutely necessary to obtain anything like the desired effect. Two of the hats illustrated are of hatter's plush, or pressed beaver; the other is a combination of velvet and felt, the facing in this case being of felt.

Many satin hats are worn, the majority being faced with velvet. Silk hats, especially moire and Bengaline, are much in vogue. Here again velvet is introduced, as facings are quite the order of the day. Velvet hats are not infrequently faced with satin, or silk, usually in a lighter color. As the hats are exceedingly broad of brim, and are worn far back on the coiffure, the under brim is a conspicuous feature. It must be born in mind that there is absolutely no under brim trimming used. Bandeaux, when used at all, are simply covered with maline, in a manner the least conspicuous. It is for this reason that the hair must be arranged so full, otherwise the head seems quite buried beneath the huge headpiece. This feature, the absence of all under-brim decoration, is one of the most important of the present day fashion. There is apparently no end to the trimming heaped on the hats, and arranged, for the most part, impartially over the entire top. Cascade feather arrangements are very popular. Ostrich, marabout, uncurled ostrich, blondine, coque and hackle are many of the feather combinations being used.

The third illustration shows a representative cascade effect of uncurled ostrich and aigrettes. Willow plumes are the most elegant, in the ostrich line. They are frequently in two-tone effect, the shading being from the quill outward, the edges of the fronds being the darker. This idea is worthy of special attention, as formerly, when shaded feathers were used the colors blended toward the tip instead of across the feather, so to speak.

Large wings are very popular. They are mounted at angles almost unheard of, and are stunning on large hats. For producing the broad effects, which are so decidedly in vogue, nothing is more successful than large wings or huge ribbon bows. Ribbon is used in great quantities for millinery, the soft silk, especially faille, weaves in four or five inch widths being most in favor. To be sure there are some fancy ribbons, pompadour and Persian effects, but these need to be used with great skill.

On the rose-trimmed model shown there is a smart, spider-like, wired bow of old gold ribbon introduced on a hat of a deep Burgundy, trimmed with roses which vary in color through red to purple. The combining of red and purple, and of cerise and cherry color, with purple, is another of the season's notable features. A model shown at a millinery opening at the Waldorf-Astoria was of purple velvet, the crown banked with purple clematis. Nested in the flowers, a little to the left of the front, was a wired bow of bright cerise velvet ribbon. Another hat showing this combination was a large purple velvet "kettle shape," lavishly trimmed with American beauties.

Purple is, by the way, the leading color in millinery, with Empire green, a bright emerald shade, running it a close second. The later color is used, however, more for trimming purposes, rather than for entire hats, and usually it is relieved by black. Morning glories, clematis, roses, and orchids are the flowers in greatest demand, especially in the purple colorings.

For gowns, yellow is the color first in favor. Banana-colored cloths are used, as well as those that are a rich butter color, for wraps, and gowns for afternoon wear, while all shades of yellow vie with one another for first gaslight favor. Golden browns, and the leather shades which blend into old gold, are extremely smart. Brown net gowns are elegant for evening wear. The most fashionable nets are the filets, plain or with pattern darned in. Filet laces, and insertions are the rage. These are darned, as it is called, that is the design worked in, in gold, silk floss or silver thread. The designs are classic in their simplicity, the Greek key border being most favored. Next to the filet effects there are handsome galoons and passementries. A revival of jet is predicted.

Jet jewelry is one of the season's prettiest fads. Chains, bracelets, pins and hair ornaments being fashioned from cut jet. Another jewelry novelty is the large pearl earring. This amounts to a craze in New York at present. Earrings are once more extremely fashionable, the large flat effects that cover the lobe of the ear, and are not pendent, being the favored variety. The newest earrings have a clever little clamp devise which does away entirely with the necessity of having the ears pierced. Baroque and imitation pearl are, of course, pressed into service, so that pearl earrings may be within the reach of all. They can be bought for from 39 cents up to as many dollars and beyond. They are the fad of the hour.

From earrings to hosiery and footwear is quite a jump, but you must know that colored stockings are now "the thing," the color being, of course, the same as the gown, and that black shoes, with colored kid uppers, are the very latest. Such fancy footwear is by no means confined to house wear. One sees it in the street daily, and as the fashion is to wear the skirts ankle length, this fashion is in no danger of being passed by unnoticed. Patent leather vamps may have kid or suede tops, with large buttons to match the tops, which, in turn, harmonize with the gown, and likewise the hosiery. When pumps are worn, as they are, even in the street, colored stockings are very smart.

Now, a word about veils. The newest are perfectly square, measuring from a yard to two and a half. They drape exquisitely and are, of course, of chiffon, plain, ombre, dotted or with wide border effects. Their arrangement is an art. Long veil pins are used to clasp the veil at the nape of the neck. As for face veils, the newest are the chantilly and blond net effects, in solid colors. These are much newer than the ordinary meshes. Few women do not wear a veil these days of some description, and usually they are arranged, even the net effects, to cover the entire top of the hat. It is a pretty fashion, and one that was born of necessity, for without a veil it would be quite impossible to keep the elaborate coiffures in order.

It must be admitted that the fashions are ultra, and in many cases, rather unlovely, particularly the heavy coats and street gowns. Loud striped effects, in rather queer color combinations are made up into short-waisted, shapeless, rather baggy looking garments, with sleeves that are an outcome of the kimona idea, there being in most cases no shoulder seam. Pleated skirts are giving away to 11 and 13-gored skirts, which, it must be admitted, are extremely smart. Gowns, and, indeed, all dresses, are extremely artistic. It is only in the heavy materials made up for street wear that the present picturesque mode is not at its best. As a matter of fact, a woman must be a Venus to appear her best, and a very tall and exceedingly thin Venus at that. Curves are entirely out of fashion, and massage, dieting and exercise are the chief occupations of the women who follow the mode.

Paris Fashions

Perhaps there was never a season when Dame Fashion provided such eccentric, one might almost say, weird, combinations, in the way of millinery, as well as trimmings for cloaks and mantles. Evening cloaks and wraps are always to the fore, and more especially so at this time of the year, but just now cloth and velvet cloaks for afternoon wear are receiving a great deal of attention. These are made to fall quite loose from the shoulder, of uneven length, being finished in points, squares, rounds, and any imaginable angle; in fact, geometry would seem to play an important part in their construction. Then, as already stated, the trimming is eccentric and extremely elaborate. For instance, a velvet mantle will be trimmed with ermine bands and encrustations of Alencon lace, the lace being ornamented and edged with pearls. Particularly handsome is a three-quarter-length model in black velvet, which is gathered into a plastron, forming square yoke back and front of ermine. At each side of the gathers at the back two large bird's wings are embroidered on the velvet in silver beads, one end reaching over the shoulder to the front, and the other finished off in three pearl tassels, falling unevenly just below the waist. The same pearl tassels decorate the front of the mantle, and the wide sleeves are finished off with a deep band of ermine, from which falls a wide frill of Alencon lace.

Another model which deserves mention is a long astrakan cloak. Wide bands of velvet, mi-centre at the waist, form the back and front and this velvet is continued over the shoulders and forms the wide sleeves, which are slightly gathered into bands of astrakan at the wrists, forming cuffs with a narrow heading of orchidee velvet. The collar is carried out in the same style. The astrakan, rounded off into a patte, meets just over each shoulder and the part that should form the sleeve is cut away to a point, finished off with a black silk gland, and falls loose under the arm. More black glands ornament the velvet front and back, increasing in size towards the hem.

Yet another model is carried out in wood violet velvet, with sleeves draped into a large button, or, rather, black silk soutache, placed just below the shoulder. In this case the entire garment is edged with two wide bands formed of black silk soutaches, separated from each other by a bouillonne of velvet. This is made to cross over in front, fastening invisibly at the bust, or it can be thrown open.

In many instances garments, which may be called with equal reason jackets or cloaks, are made to open over a vest of printed velvet, suede or silk, and the wide sleeves, three-quarter-length, or reaching quite to the wrist, will be carried out in the same material. The trimming of braid, guimpe, soutache, or whatever it may be, is carried out in the same style on both velvet and cloth, thus making the garment seem less patchwork. Sleeves are receiving considerable modifications, but the full bell-shaped sleeve is far from being discarded. This fact may be accounted for by the many shoulder capes that are being made to the cloaks and mantles. These capes, more particularly when starting from shoulder straps or braces, have much the same appearance as a Japanese sleeve, but the latest note is to have an undersleeve which is continued to the wrist and carried out in some contrasting material, in velvet, silk or mousseline, tucked or gathered horizontally, recalling the collar, yoke, waistcoat, or some other part of the garment. Many indoor gowns and blouses are being made with long sleeves, and although the soft material may be gathered or tucked, the arm is perfectly moulded, and, later on in the season, when this style is more usual, the sleeve is likely to be very long indeed, reaching the knuckles of the hand in a point or rounded pattes.

It would seem to be a record season, so far as extravagance in materials is concerned. I have seen some beautiful cloths with a velvet finish, and some with a satin or velvet stripe, in contrasting shade, woven in. A novelty in a dress length is carried out in drap velours, sage green color, which is striped with bands of Chantilly lace (black), while between each stripe, forming a heading between the cloth and lace, a narrow thread of silver pearls is worked in.

Princess gowns and skirts are being made very tight-fitting at the waist and around the hips, while below the hips the material falls in an immense sweep to the long train, clinging round the legs with each movement. Needless to say, these skirts are unlined, and the foundation, a silk petticoat, is of the slightest. When carried to an extreme point, as is often the case here in Paris, this is a most uncomfortable garment to wear, and many society ladies are finding it necessary to take a lesson in deportment and learn how to glide about; to walk is impossible in these gowns, without meeting with an accident.

Another note of the moment is the jacket of a contrasting shade and material to the skirt. A smart model of this style is carried out in brown drap velours, the long, clinging skirt is simply trimmed with an entre-deux of velvet roses about four inches from the hem. The jacket worn with this is of a deeper shade of velvet with roll collar and cuffs, ornamented with the same shaded roses as are found on the skirt, but much smaller in size. Sketch 1 is another instance of the same style. In this case the skirt and undersleeve are carried out in a grey and green plaid cloth. The jacket of smoked grey cloth is very handsomely trimmed with silk-braided cords and glands, waistcoat of grey printed velvet, black satin bow at the neck and black satin waist belt and strass buckle. The hat worn with this is a mi-cloche, the brim being slightly turned up on one side, made of dark grey velvet and lined white satin. Two large shaded feathers and a satin choux form the only trimming. The mi-cloche hat is being very much worn, the cloche shape having become very common.

Sketch II. is a jacket made of alternate bands of chinchilla and braided velvet. Slightly centre at the back, it is finished in rounded tabs at the hem. The large muff is typical of the shape being worn. It is very flat, very soft, and rather narrower at the top than bottom. The hat is a felt cloche, edged with a narrow band of black velvet, the crown being absolutely covered with a huge bunch of feathers, shaded from white to dark grey. For house and evening gowns much drapery is used, either taking the form of fichus or scarfs, which, twisted round the shoulders, fall to the hem of the skirt, or being caught in at the waist, forms an apron front or sash; or again, it is the material itself which looks as if it had been draped round the living model and stitched in place. There seems to be no possible means of getting it on when once arranged.

Sketch III. shows a very simple and gracefully draped tulle gown, of a pale shade of maize, heavily embroidered in a lace design. The tunic skirt is made quite full, while the bodice is draped over each shoulder, crossed at the back and then brought again to the front, where it forms a wide apron. At least one Rue de la Paix house is indulging in veritable Greek evening gowns and tea gowns, copied as nearly as possible from ancient sketches, and they will have a certain success, as everything bizarre and risque will have in Paris.

During Winter the lace blouses are likely to hold their own, but the novelty is to have a slight groundwork of net or tulle, liberally trimmed with at least two varieties of lace and sometimes very delicate touches of an art color introduced as headings to tucks, edgings of yokes, small rosettes and bows. The effect is extremely good when lightly carried out.

REDUCTION OF DROP LETTER RATE.

The Post Office Department is considering the establishment of a one-cent drop letter rate in cities having free delivery. The rate is now two cents. We would favor this reduction, providing it were not made at the expense of the smaller cities, towns and villages. The department has quite a substantial surplus on hand, but there is pressing need for its expenditure in the direction of better salaries for postmasters and general improvement of the postal facilities. The West, particularly, requires attention just now.

REFUSE TO BUY TICKETS.

Chatham Retail Merchants' Association took a much needed step forward when it ruled against the indiscriminate purchase of tickets in aid of churches, charities, concerts, and other affairs. Chatham is peculiarly blessed with charitable ladies who are forever and aye evolving something in the way of a concert or tea meeting in aid of this, that or the other, more or less deserving charity. The merchants on King St. are the most convenient victims, and the toll has in the past proven a heavy one. Just a day or two before the meeting, The Review's correspondent chanced to enter a store as a lady canvasser passed out. The lady was smiling, but the storekeeper didn't smile. "There ought to be a law against that sort of thing," he declared vehemently. In the absence of a law, the R.M.A. put a stringent and positive resolution on their books, which should do considerable toward abating the evil. Last April a resolution was passed "That no member of the association shall advertise on any printed card or program, nor permit his or their firm name to appear on any subscription list for charitable institutions." An amendment, "Nor purchase tickets for concerts, raffles, socials or excursions," was proposed but the association wisely decided to leave no room for ambiguity, and merely added, "Nor purchase tickets."

The resolution, if steadfastly carried out—and there is no reason why it should not be—will save the average merchant ten times his annual fee in the association.

THE KIMMEL FELT CO.

An Ontario charter has been granted the Kimmel Felt Company, Limited, Berlin, with a capital of $200,000, divided into $100 shares. The incorporators were Talman H. Rieder and August J. Kimmel, manufacturers, and Arthur H. Kimmel, commercial traveler, all of Berlin, and Armond C. Kimmel, foreman, and Alfred D. Vice, machinist, both of Elmira. The object of the company is "to manufacture and sell felt, felt goods, knitted goods, leather goods, and footwear, and to carry on any other business which may conveniently be carried on in connection therewith."

Cultivate the High-Class Trade

SPECIAL order work is a fad with the better class of trade. Cultivate it. It will pay you well. The people who comprise this class require something exclusive — something "different" — something Mrs. Van Rich in the next Avenue is not likely to have—something Miss de Style, next door, never saw. What's more, they are willing to pay for it—and pay handsomely, too.

Furs that Stay Sold

NOW this sort of work is a specialty with us. We have thousands of skins always in stock — dressed in the inimitable Paquet fashion—all ready to cut at a moment's notice for those who require something possessing individuality. Get your share of this trade—we'll back you up. If you are not now on our visiting list, drop us a line and you'll be on immediately.

The Canadian Fur Trade

A Good Outlook for Sorting Trade—Prices Continue High.

Weather unpropitious to the fur trade has caused manufacturers and jobbers to somewhat delay sending out their travelers for the assorting season. Up to the present writing, October 29th, the weather, broadly speaking, has not been favorable to active fur trade. This bad spell, however, will not affect the trade to any extent, as a few cold weeks which are sure to follow will surely brighten things up. Fur houses which have sent out travelers report a good repeat order business.

The prospects for the balance of the season would indicate that the sorting trade will be up to, if not better than last year. Merchants were rather inclined to place small orders at the opening of the season, and, consequently, it would appear as though the sorting trade would be better than the corresponding season of last year.

Ladies' fur-lined garments are shown in a large variety of styles. The Persian lamb jacket, trimmed with mink, is as popular as ever in the better class goods. Electric seal jackets are also prominent. In this line a 24-inch length is meeting with favor. Muskrat, although high in price, continues popular in ladies' jackets and for lining purposes. Muskrat jackets are to the fore, both in short and long lengths, 24 and 42 inches.

Ladies' garments trimmed with otter, Persian lamb, mink, sable and imitation sable, are fashionable just now. Popular linings are muskrat, mink and dyed marmot.

Small fur pieces are selling fairly well. Stoles and ruffs in throw-over effects are much in evidence. The Coronation muff shape continues to be popular. Furs in excellent request for small pieces are mink, sable, German otter, and Isabella coon. The demand for fox is not up to expectations.

Men's fur coats are meeting with success all along the line. The staple styles, trimmings and linings are again to the fore. The coon coat continues in demand, in spite of high prices.

Prices Remain Firm.

Prices on nearly all furs remain firm and high, with a marked upward tendency. The high rates are not, in most cases, due to scarcity of skins, but rather to the improved condition of the buying public, whose better means have increased the demand for furs. Mink is ever going higher. Muskrats are also in an upward way. Indications are that Persian lamb will also continue high in price, although the limit has been reached. With a few exceptions, like Alaska sable, all fur skins have advanced in price enormously within the last two years. Heavy wombat coats, etc., are in good demand, but high prices restrict sales.

Metropolitan Displays.

Montreal retailers, in the centre of the Canadian fur trade, strive to begin the season early. During October, window and interior displays were of a high order. Department and specialty fur stores vied with one another in the attractiveness of their exhibits.

Robertson & Co., one of the old retail fur establishments in Montreal, when visited by The Review last month, showed an exceptionally fine line of ladies' fur-lined coats, small fur pieces, and men's lines, etc.

Persian Lamb Skins.

In Persian lamb, the popular jackets are of a smart military effect. They are trimmed with braids and metal buttons, and retail at from $100 to $200. This style is also made in Caracul.

Seal Jackets.

Seal jackets, as a rule, are worn about 24 inches long and are made both fitted to the figure and in the box coat effect. These jackets, while extremely high in price, still find their usual market.

Ladies' Cloth Coats.

Ladies' cloth coats, fur-lined and trimmed, are expected to be very much worn this year. They are shown in a large variety of styles and colors. The one most prominent is a fawn cloth, lined with squirrel and trimmed with mink. Other popular colors are dark blue, trimmed with sable fox, browns and staple blacks. These coats can either be used for street or evening wear.

Evening Cloaks.

Some beautiful effects in evening cloaks are now shown for the Christmas trade. Black velvet, lined with Canadian ermine and trimmed with Russian ermine or chinchilla, is rapidly coming into prominence. Other lines shown are of white cloth, lined with white and grey squirrel and trimmed with white fox.

Great Variety in Motor Coats.

The fur departments of the retail dry goods houses in particular seem to have taken a special pride in getting together a wonderful collection of modish automobile coats, and offering them a little in advance, as it were. At any rate, the woman who anticipates the need of a fur motor coat can look about to her heart's content before coming to a final decision, and she will learn, among other things, that in the matter of style, the choice of furs, the detail of lining and finish, the new coats are of greater variety than the models of other seasons. Coats of muskrat and Russian pony, both dyed black and in natural colors, are freely displayed. Squirrel coats are also to the fore. In harmony with the safe buying of the retailer, there is quite a demand for this line this season.

Fur Pieces Selling Well.

In muffs and neck-pieces, the popular furs are mink, black lynx, white fox, ermine and Persian lamb. Sable fox, natural lynx and blue lynx are also prominent. The stoles and neck-pieces are this year shown in a great variety of styles. One of the best neck-pieces is the throw-over effect. Muffs also comprise many styles. Large pillow-shaped muffs are meeting with marked favor just now. In fox and lynx skins the muffs are worn flat, with head of the animal hanging. The effect is quite pleasing.

Men's Fur-Lined Coats.

Men's fur-lined coats, lined with mink, muskrat, nutria and brown squirrel, trimmed with otter, mink, and Persian lamb, are very fashionable. Loose-fitting coats are seen in abundance, and are again meeting with a deserved success. Coon coats bid fair to be as popular as ever this season. Prices now run from $50 to $125 at retail.

GREENLEESE'S CATALOGUE.

A striking example of the up-to-date fur catalogue is furnished in a publication gotten out for the present season by S. T. Greenleese & Sons, Ltd., Montreal. The catalogue, which measures 9 inches in width by 11 inches in height, is bound,—folio style—in very heavy paper in a beautiful shade of green. The front cover bears the name "S. T. Greenleese & Sons" in relief, with a panel enclosing their trade mark, and an artistically engraved bear's head brought out in natural colors. The bear's head trade mark appears on the first page, but the cover is cut to show as above described. The interior pages are of exceptionally high grade coated paper, and each of the right hand pages shows a fine half-tone, illustrating the fur garments and small pieces for both ladies and gentlemen. On the last page, inside the cover, are directions for self measurement. The catalogue is typical of what is most artistic and elegant in design and workmanship.

SWIFT, COPLAND & CO.'S CATALOGUE.

Swift, Copland & Company, Ltd., Montreal, have recently issued to the trade a very interesting and attractive catalogue and price list. The catalogue consists of 24 pages inside the cover. Its size is 9 inches in height and 6 inches wide. The cover is embossed in a beautiful tint of blue. The half tones, of which there are nearly seventy, comprise everything in ladies' fur coats, jackets, muffs, ruffs, stoles and small fur pieces of all descriptions. Men's fur-lined coats, caps and gauntlets are also shown in various styles. All the half-tones are number-

McCOMBER & CUMMINGS' CATALOGUE.

Trade catalogues, and especially those devoted to furs, are always of interest. They must be out of the general run in point of execution, because the representation of fur on the printed page, to in any way convey the beauties of the original, must be the work of high class artists. McComber & Cummings, Montreal, have issued such a catalogue, a useful as well as compact one. The size of the catalogue is 9 inches in width by 12 inches in height, and it contains in all 18 pages. The cuts illustrate the newest designs in ladies' coats, small pieces for ladies' and men's coats, comprising every fur suitable to the Canadian market. Notable half-tones among the small pieces are of muffs, ruffs, stoles, scarfs, collarettes, fur caps and collars. On the back page, inside the cover, the usual self measurement is explained. The cover design, in three colorings, is art nouveau, and contains an illustration of a lady wearing handsome furs. Mentioning The Review will insure prompt delivery to any merchant wishing one of these catalogues.

THE WALDRON, DROUIN CO., LTD., CATALOGUE.

The Waldron, Drouin Co., Ltd., 138 McGill Street, Montreal, have issued an exceedingly attractive catalogue for the 1907-08 season. The catalogue measures 7 inches in width by 10 inches in height and contains twenty-two pages. It is accompanied by a sixteen-page price list. It is indexed, and when a certain style is seen in the catalogue, there is no difficulty in finding the right range of prices. The cuts illustrate the newest designs in ladies' fur coats, men's fur-lined and raccoon coats, fur collars, fur gauntlets, stoles, muffs, etc. On the back page, inside the cover, are found directions for self measurement. The catalogue is bound in a cover of heavy grey stock, on the front of which is engraved a large tiger and also a young lady, dressed in the "cold weather" style. Inside the front cover this firm state: "We have much pleasure in presenting, with our compliments, our catalogue for 1907-08."

World's Fur Trade

More Extensive Than Ever — Raw Skins go to Germany—Some Interesting Information.

In view of the frequent questions asked as to the fur trade in general, and particularly as to the reasons for Germany's importance therein, the following facts will be of interest:

"Occasionally one hears the fear expressed that the fur-bearing animals are becoming extinct. The fur trade of North America is larger to-day than ever before. It is true that the buffalo no longer comes into consideration as a fur-bearing animal, and the beaver is also nearly extinct in most countries. The sea otter, which formerly furnished 100,000 furs annually, yields not 400 at the highest, and the seal also seems to be rarer, as the number of sealskins has decreased from 100,000 to 10,000 yearly, but other fur-bearing animals have taken the place of these, and the dimensions of the American fur trade are at present greater than they have ever been.

More money is now earned on skunk, muskrat, and fox furs than ever before on beavers, sea otters, seals, and other rare furs. The depots in Canada and the United States send the largest part of the furs they receive to the three famous fur markets of the world—London, Leipzig, and Nijni-Novgorod. The buying itself is done by expert fur brokers.

In London the furs are sold by auction and an average of $5,000,000 worth of raw furs are disposed of there annually. The principal sale in Nijni-Novgorod, Russia, takes place in August. There all the Asiatic furs, such as Persian lambs and Astrakhans, Mongolian goatskins, and Siberian sables, ermine, rare squirrel furs, and, although in very small quantities, otters and seals are sold.

Germany's Expert Finishing Processes.

The Leipzig market is held at the great fur "Messe" at Easter time. To it come buyers and sellers from North and South America. Persia, China, Siberia, Japan, Tibet and England. The "Messe" lasts two weeks and is an interesting relic of mediaeval times, which still retains its importance. Why is it that Germany, which furnishes no fur-bearing animals, plays so important a part in the fur trade? This is due to the coloring and dressing of the furs. Whole towns and cities are engaged in the preparation of the raw skins Austria and Russia produce duce the best squirrel skins for lining, but they must all be sent to Germany to be dressed. The secret of this dressing lies partially in drawing the fat out of the skins without soiling the fur, which is of great importance in the case of ermine, white fox, and polar bear furs. Many dressers finish the furs with poor fat instead of butter, or do not properly remove the unpleasant odor, as they do not treat the skins with mahogany shavings. Germany takes the foremost place in the coloring of all sheepskins, which is attributed to the composition of the German river water and to the properties of the German clay. There are sent annually to the sales at Leipzig and Nijni-Novgorod 200,000 English fox skins, 500,000 German fox skins, 300,000 Russian fox skins, 90,000 American red fox skins, and over 50,000 Alaskan fox skins of all sorts.

WANAMAKER AT WORK.

John Wanamaker, the merchant prince of Philadelphia and New York, is a man whose working capacity seems unlimited.

He has built up his immense business by sheer pluck and keeping everlastingly at work. He began as a penniless boy, and is now the greatest merchant in America.

Here is the story of Mr. Wanamaker's working day:

He rises before 6 a.m.; takes a short walk or ride on horseback before breakfast at 6.30; eats little at all times; arrives at his office at 8.15.

He then spends an hour in looking over and answering letters. His rule is to answer each letter received as quickly as possible.

He leaves for home about 6.30, has dinner at 7, and spends the evening in conversation with his family or friends, in reading or quiet recreation.

ONTARIO.

J. E. Diamond has opened a fur store in Listowel.

The Retail Merchants' Association of Galt will open clubrooms.

The Galt Retail Merchants' Association held their annual banquet on October 15.

The T. Eaton Co. have opened large additions to both their Toronto and Winnipeg stores.

Geo. Naylor & Co., of Ingersoll, have made extensive improvements in their men's wear store.

The Waterloo Knitting Company, Carleton Place, has been incorporated with a capital of $250,000.

The Mackay Brothers, Limited, of Renfrew, with a capital of $50,000, has been incorporated under Ontario letters patent.

Peterborough has gained 1,000 in population during the past year. There are 111 commercial travelers residing in the city.

The Orangeville Woollen Mills were destroyed by fire, with a loss of about $12,000, and insurance of $6,000. The mills will be rebuilt.

Geo. C. Hanna, Wingham, recently moved into a new store, 30x115 feet. It is well fitted up, and Mr. Hanna calls it "The Little Eaton."

The re-opening of A. W. Cressman's remodelled store at Peterborough was the ninth anniversary of the establishment of his first store there.

The largest excavation ever made in Toronto is that for the extension of the Simpson store. The new building will add eleven acres of floor space.

The Ideal Clothing Company was organized recently at Port Hope to manufacture men's clothing, shirts and overalls. The majority of stockholders are residents of the town.

D. Morrison, the credit man, Toronto, has purchased and remodelled a three-storey building. He intends to add men's furnishings, staples, ladies' hosiery and boots and shoes. He already carries clothing, ladies' furs, mantles and skirts.

The Clinton Knitting Co. are about to commence operations on an additional two-storey building 30x60 feet. At a meeting of the directors it was decided to apply for a Dominion charter, and the capital of the company will be increased $35,000.

E. Johnston, of Port Arthur, has completed extensive alterations to his store. It has been enlarged until now the dimensions are 22x90 feet. The arrangement of departments is much better than before. Mr. Johnston is making a specialty of ladies' ready-to-wear garments, although, of course, he carries all lines of general dry goods.

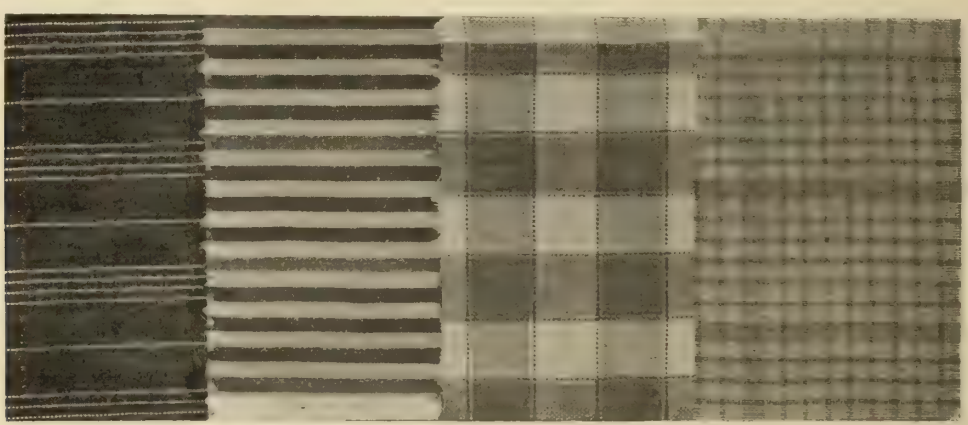
Negotiations have been completed by which Gordon, Mackay & Co. are to become the tenants, with the option of purchase, of the warehouse of the W. J. Gage Co. The premises adjoin their present warehouse, and will give them a big extra floor space. The frontage is 74 feet on Front street, and the depth 197 feet. The building is six storeys high.

Plain Cloths the Big Sellers

Plain Clothes and Piece-Dyed Fancies in the Lead for Spring—Stripes and a Few Checks Form the Novelty End.

Travelers are finding retail stocks fairly clear, only a few tweeds being the stock of any moment carried over. Orders, however, are being placed very conservatively. Buyers are exercising a large degree of caution.

The heavy business has been done, so far, largely in plain cloths, and there is no doubt that the coming Spring will be largely a plain season. A good business will be done in piece-dyed fancies, materials in which the pattern is in the same color as the fabric.



In fancies, proper stripes decidedly lead. The majority of the effects shown are in subdued colorings, and the stripe pattern is indistinct. This also applies to checks shown.

Taffeta cloths, batistes, panamas, chiffon panamas and fine serges are the leading sellers. Mohairs and lustres in plain cloths and in phantom effects, in black, navy blue and cream, will be in demand. Though the tendency is away from white, white serges promise to hold their place. Even now in the late days of October, suits of white serge are frequently seen on the street.

Voiles and other transparent weaves are in increasing vogue. Chiffon voiles are strong sellers. Among novelty lines may be mentioned chiffon illusion, a particularly soft and fine weave. Stripes and checks in voiles are not included in novelty fabrics. These are not only in self color but in contrasting tones. White grounds well covered with stripes are shown. Silk pin stripes and satin stripes are also shown. Large pastiles on sheer silk and wool fabrics, as well as silk stripes, are being shown.

Brown is so far the big color seller though fancy blues promise to distance them later.

Though the trade is not much interested in tweeds, there are buyers who favor them. They say that the price at which they can be produced will be a big factor in their sale.

Silks In Active Demand

Soft Finished Silks for Spring Wear—Manufacturers Full of Orders — No Indications of Easier Prices in the near Future.

The class of silks in demand for the Spring season is of a soft nature, and for the popular trade, such weaves as paillette, marvelleux, etc., with soft duchesse satin ranking as the high class article.

Plain silks will be the leading sellers, and colors will play an important part. Taffetas are always in big demand and the vogue for veilings, in spite of the high price of silk, is helping the sale of taffetas. The call is for the light weight, bright finishes, and taffeta chiffon is still the leading seller.

Though plain silks are to be the leading sellers, fancies are well to the fore. Stripes play the most prominent part in collection and stripes, modified by overprintings, appear to be the basis of the majority of the Spring patterns. Shots are now being employed for the millinery trade.

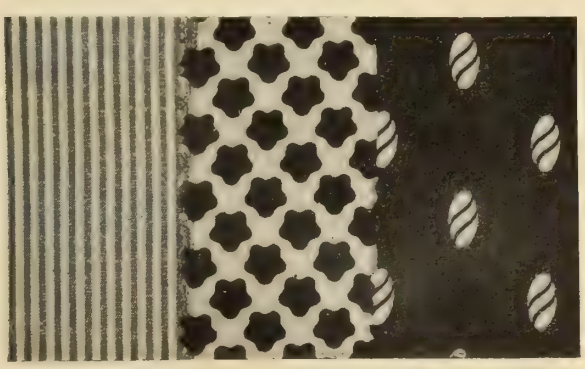
Fifth Avenue Model. Suit of Bronze-Brown Cheviot, Trimmed Braid and Cord Ornaments. Small collar of Japanese Embroidery.

In spite of the fact that they were heavy sellers in the past Summer, shantungs and tussors are giving every promise of an increased demand. Dyed shantung is shown in a big range of colors and promises to be a leading fabric.

For popular selling, small patterns in spots, stripes and checks, in chine-taffeta, louisenes, tamolins will sell freely.

Paris says satins, and particularly in the millinery end, satins are coming to the fore.



Satin Striped Tussor, Novelty Silk for Spring.

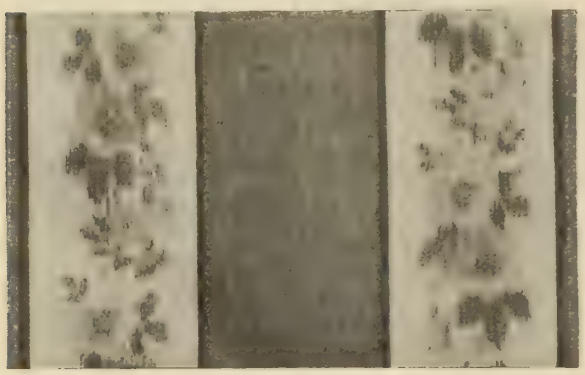
Wash Goods

Wash Goods Lines Attractive — Good Season Promised — Big Interest in Ginghams.

The many movements up or down that raw cotton is making can have little or no influence upon Spring prices. As in other textiles, it is the spinner who fixes prices, and many manufacturers are working on so narrow a margin of profit that they are complaining. In some quarters there seems to be an impression that prices may come down, and due to this and other causes, purchasing is not exactly as brisk at this time as last year. Nevertheless a big interest is manifested in wash goods. Ginghams, printed fabrics, colored cottons, and fine white cottons cover the cotton list.

Mills making lawns, batistes, linons, etc., are sold away ahead. Manufacturers of waists, whitewear, etc., have taken large supplies. The retail trade is not ordering with any vim. This is doubtless accounted for by the fact that they know the jobbing houses have placed large contracts, and they can get the goods when wanted.

1, Striped Zephyr ; 2 and 3, Radium Foulard—Novelty Cotton Fabrics for Spring, Shown by Debenhams, (Canada) Ltd.



In white fabrics, fancy mercerized materials are a stronger line than for some seasons. Corded checks, mercerized stripes and jacquard figures are all featured.

Linons, lawns, batistes, etc., are selling in colors. Linons promise particular prominence as they are likely to be freely used for suits and street costumes. The chief colors are blues, tan, helio, green, brown and natural, or cream.

Lawns not only come in plain colors, but the novelty lines come in bordered effects. Not only are staple gingham lines decidedly good, but a large business will be done in sheer light weight zephyrs. Plain zephyrs in all the leading colors are featured, and checked and striped patterns in great profusion are shown.

In printed goods, voiles and cambrics are good, chiefly in stripes and in spots, and what are known as "classic" patterns.

Mercerized fabrics in imitation of silk, in neat silk designs, and imitations of wool fabrics, are shown. Some of these closely imitate foulards and should share the popularity of washing silks.

For skirt and coat suits, white and colored linen are strongly in evidence. These goods are still in high favor for the better trade. This is a line that is in short supply, and one that is sure to be a big seller. Though from a yardage standpoint white linens will lead, there is an increasing sale of solid colors. Blue shades, pink, green, helio, brown, tan and cream, comprise the list.

Broadcloths

Big Sellers for the Present Fall and Also for the Coming Spring—Orders Placed with Manufacturers for the Fall of 1908.

A splendid business has been done in light weight chiffon broadcloths, and not only has the counter trade been large, but the broadcloth suit has been the popular seller in both medium and high class lines. Not only are dark shades selling for street wear, but putty and pastel shades are being taken by the exclusive trade for dressy wear. The expensive coat is of broadcloth, not only for street and carriage, but also for evening wear.

A very large proportion of the coats shown now for the Fall season in Paris are of colored broadcloth. The popular shades are evique or purple, bronze-brown, beaver, peacock and moss green.

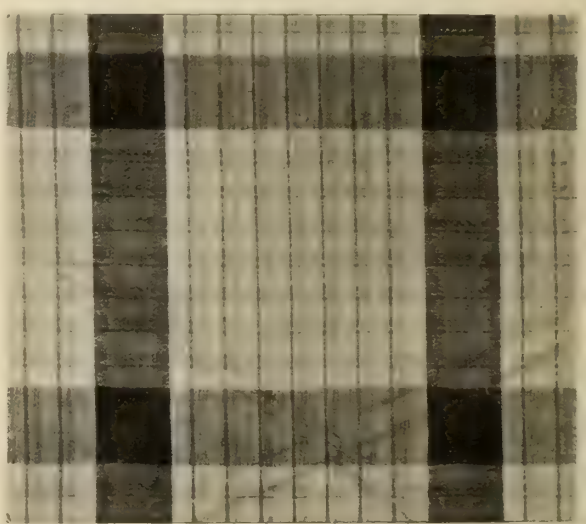
Broadcloths, though not a Spring fabric, are selling well for the coming Spring. Moreover, orders are now being placed with the manufacturers for the Fall and Winter of 1908. Evidently the end of their vogue is not yet reached.

Wool Again Soars

The New Wool Season Opens with Higher Prices—Wool up from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent.

Wool prices are rapidly making a record, and the end of the heavy advances on woolen fabrics has not yet been reached. At the last series of sales in London merino advanced 10 per cent. and cross-breds from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. There was a big array of buyers, chiefly from France, Germany and Yorkshire present. Competition was very keen and wool evidently was badly wanted.

The opening sales of the new clip in Australia also saw an advance. During the past week buyers in jobbing houses have received notices of advances from 1d to 2d per yard.



DRESS GOODS NOTES.

William Agnew, of William Agnew & Co., Montreal, has returned from his usual foreign buying trip. Mr. Agnew speaks of the continued high prices ruling for fine wools. Coupled with this advance in price is the scarcity of fine wools.

Silks are practically 25 per cent. higher than six months ago, this applying to almost every quality in weave.

IN TEMPORARY QUARTERS.

Konig & Stuffmann, Montreal, have been forced to vacate their handsome warehouse at 11 Victoria Square, owing to extensive alterations and additions to the building. These alterations were necessary in order to provide this firm with additional facilities. In the meantime they have moved to temporary and commodious premises at 28 Victoria Square, in the Mark Fisher Building. The moving has been accomplished without any inconvenience to the trade. They expect their old building to be ready for occupation about the middle of January. This will be the third addition to Konig & Stuffmann's premises in the past 10 years.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Expansion is the order of the day.

In order to accommodate our growing trade we have laid plans to enlarge our warehouse facilities at 11 Victoria Square. This has necessitated us vacating the building and occupying, until about January 15th, temporary premises at

28 VICTORIA SQUARE
(Mark Fisher Building)

There will be no interference with business, and the re-arrangement of stocks enables us to offer many desirable lines at attractive figures. You will find our Fall stock of LACES, TRIMMINGS, HANDKERCHIEFS, Etc., replete with active selling lines.

Buyers should make a point of calling this month.

Dress Accessories

Gloves

Conditions at Retail—The Wrist Gloves are Good for Fall.

Retail glove conditions are in first-class shape at present. Wrist gloves are improving in sale, with a considerably larger business than one year ago. The better grades of gloves have been selling the best. Tans have been good sellers so far. They are closely followed by black, navy, gray, green and red, in the order mentioned.

"Violette Cloche"—New Circular Veil, in Fine Silk Point D'Esprit, with Embroidered Spot Border. Shown by Debenhams, (Canada) Limited, Montreal.

Cape Glove.

The English cape, or mannish glove, for women, both pique or prix seam, which retail at $1, are coming into greater demand each season. Comfort, wear and general satisfaction accounts largely for this. In this line, tans are about the only color asked for. The one-dome fastener in this glove is the most satisfactory.

In long gloves, tans, blacks, navies, grays, greens, and whites, are selling well, particularly the first three mentioned. For evening wear, some pink and sky colors are frequently asked for, as well as the staple white. The 12 and 16-button lengths continue in exceptional favor.

Prices run about the same as last year at retail, but some exceptional values have been offered during the last two months. These have been mostly lamb goods, however.

Cold Weather Gloves.

With the coming of the cold weather and the long coat sleeves, wrist lengths will be even more prominent than at the moment. Lined gloves are being bought quite freely, in both wool and fur-lined, at from $1 to $3.

Present conditions in the jobbing trade indicate a big glove season this Fall. Short gloves are selling well in black and tans. The mannish glove is in excellent request. The feeling for long gloves continues strong, and jobbers report quite a few orders. The kid glove business is exceptionally good, and although a decided tendency is noticed to match the gloves with costumes and hats, the darker and sober colors are taking best in this market. Greens, navies and reds are favorite shades. Tans and blacks continue to hold first position as the most sought for color in the glove trade just now. A fair trade is being done on suedes. Ringwoods are as popular as ever in the eastern ground, and are shown in the quiet, subdued effects. Motor gloves are seen in abundance, and are selling well. This glove is in reality a long Ringwood. Children's lines have sold well in all the staples and colors.

Fabric Gloves.

A fabric glove is assured for the Spring season, and it is by no means speculative to place large orders, as good numbers will be fairly scarce. The long white and black silk glove should not be neglected. Whites and creams will be stronger than ever before in silks, lisles and taffetas. Brown and navy also deserve representation. The two-dome fasteners seem more firmly installed than in previous seasons.

One wholesaler finds that with the exception of the cheaper lines, the long glove has sold the best. The wrist length glove has sold well to retail at 25c.

Ribbons

Holiday Suggestions—Travelers are now Showing Lines for Spring.

At the present time conditions in the ribbon trade are satisfactory, so far as selling is concerned in all retail establishments, while the holiday trade, which is always good, is yet to come. From now on the merchant should push his ribbons; let him get out the slow lines and mark them down for holiday selling. If he has odd shades and colors, which have accumulated during the Summer months, now is his time, for lots of shades that will not sell for any other purpose will be snapped up for fancy work, and the woman who is not planning some piece of fancy work is singular nowadays. A progressive merchant should have a number of belts, opera bags, cushions and other articles made up from his ribbon stock, and should place them on show in his department, just to give ideas to his customers, as well as to give a nice fresh appearance to his department. This is a good plan to use at all times, but is extra attractive at this season of the year.

Just now plain ribbons are having preference with browns very hard to procure. Velvet lines are also good. The feeling for Dresdenss, alway staple at this season, is exceptionally strong, particularly in the narrow widths. Fancy ribbons will have extra sales from now till Xmas.

Prices of ribbons continue high. Many lines shown for Spring, especially plain taffetas, retailing in the ordinary way, at 25c. per yard, show advances. Some lines contain so little silk that advances are hardly worth considering. To show the way one city retailer regards the situation, the ribbon buyer states: "It hardly seems possible that much higher prices can be asked, especially for staple lines." Further, he believes that the next six months should see them on the downward trend. This view is by no means shared by wholesale importers, and other authorities in the trade.

Deliveries for Spring ought to be good, owing to such small orders being placed.

Spring buying of ribbons is now under way. Travelers are on the road again, and it is, once more, up to the merchant to anticipate his wants for the approaching season. Staple lines are much in evidence. There are, however, besides plain, quite a number of fancy lines on hand, and when they are quite complete other novelties, no doubt, will be added.

The ribbon demand for Spring promises to utilize all widths. Millinery, it is said, favors the wider ribbons, but the general counter demand includes all widths with a leaning towards the narrower widths. Ribbon velvets, especially in No. 9 and 6 widths, for bows, in both black and colors, will be a strong feature for next season. Dresdens, also, are very good at present, and there is every indication that they will continue so for Spring.

Embroideries

Plenty of Novelty in the New Lines—Filet Embroideries head the Procession.

The new filet embroideries, because they are a distinct novelty, promise to be met with great favor. They are going to be a big feature in the coming season, as their vogue is sure to be influenced by the feeling for filet effects in laces. Many of the patterns are of great beauty. They are, I am informed, simply embroideries made from lace drawings.

Already the blouse manufacturers are taking up these filet patterns, not only in bands and galons, but in the very handsome waistings. The latest filet touch is the pattern worked out in cord effects. These patterns are decidedly on the antique order.

New effects in eyelet work are shown, and in the handsome blind patterns are many new ideas, chiefly of a floral character. In the cheaper goods some attractive shadow patterns are shown.

Bands, particularly in the wider widths, and all-overs, are the best sellers. Deep flouncings also promise well. Bands and galons that can be threaded with an inch-wide ribbon are among the well thought of novelties.

Though prices are very firm, deliveries will be much better than last year.

Veilings

Records Broken—Retailers Displaying Extensive Lines—The Large Spot Feature.

The feeling this year for veilings of all kinds is strong. Both in wholesale and in retail establishments new records are being made. Owing to the novelty styles and shapes being shown, there has been an exceptional revival of interest in veilings all over the country. As a result, many large city retailers are displaying all lines to advantage. Further, women who, as a rule, were not given to wearing veils, have this season adopted the fashion.

The style of net most popular at present is the staple mesh, with a large spot, better known abroad as the cherry spot.

Velvet spot meshes are extremely prominent, and are quite a feature of the trade. Staple lines, such as plain and mottled effects, are also shown.

Filet mesh veiling, in hat lengths, is an extreme novelty for the Christmas trade. Another Paris novelty, which should increase in favor as the season develops, is a silk chantilly face veil. The shape is perfectly round and it can be conveniently used as a hat drape.

Chiffon and crepe de chene motor veiling, in single width, is quite a feature this season, and has met with marked success. Double width chiffon veiling, for motor purposes, is also selling in unusual quantities.

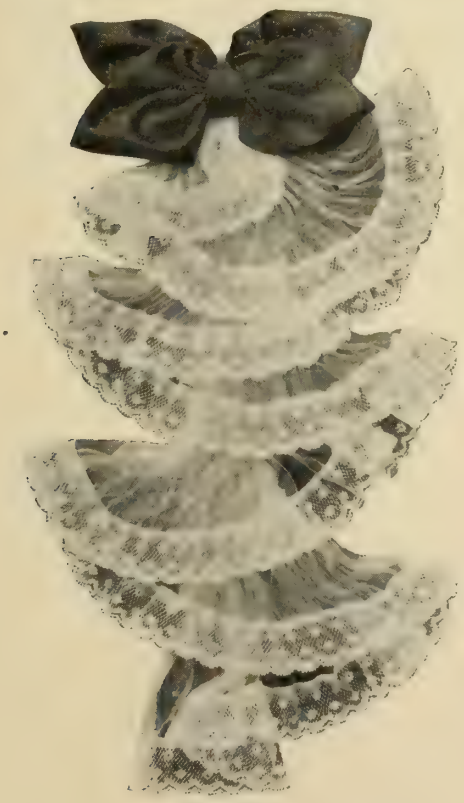
Popular Colors.

While white and black veils are staple, it is the colored veil that is the seller. Brown is a great favorite just now, while navy is also strong. Greens are only selling in fair quantities.

Broadly speaking, it is a case of everything selling.

Best selling prices for veiling at retail range from 40c. to 75c. per yard.

Jobbers' Trade Active.



In the jobbing trade, will be found many, if not all, of the novelties, as well as staple lines, now selling. There is quite a feeling for bordered veilings. Colored veilings are being ordered more than ever, especially in browns and navies. This is quite in harmony with the retail trade.

The Large Spot Feature.

One of the greatest features of the season is the demand for the large cherry spot veiling. Not long ago this style, while shown, was hardly given any attention, but demand has been quickly established. Retailers in the United States and Paris are stocking veilings of this kind, and among the better class trade the feeling is exceptionally strong.

Made Veils.

Another feature of the season is the strong feeling for made veils. The present style of draping the veil over the hat, and catching it in the back with a pin, is to a large extent responsible for this vogue. These lines are shown for the Christmas trade.

At present manufacturers find business broadening out. They are doing an exceptionally strong sorting trade in the large fancy spotted veils. They state that they are doing quite a business in crepe-de-chene veiling for the coming Winter trade. For walking and driving purposes, chiffon veilings are to the fore.

Prices are firm and show an advance of from 10 to 15 per cent. over figures ruling one year ago.

Latest Paris and New York Style, Shown by Rhys. D. Fairbairn.

Neckwear

Boxed Goods for the Christmas Trade—Marie Antoinette and Beau Brummel Jabots the Novelties.

Manufacturers are busy with Christmas lines. Boxed goods are always asked for, at this time of year, and the trade has been tempted this season with some very good values in this line.

Stiff linen collars show little or no improvement. Most retailers have a fair assortment on hand, but report that there is little doing in these lines. Canada is not alone in this respect, as in some parts of the States they have not sold remarkably well.

A very much better business has been done in the soft embroidered turn-down with a deep, moderately stiff band. Also all kinds of fancy bows are selling.

As the tailored suit comes into prominence, the jabot styles in Beau Brummel and Marie Antoinette styles become more popular as the one is designed for wear with the other.

The sale of tailored suits will also help the sale of coat sets, which have been rather disappointing in the market, though they have been a big feature on the other side.

Paris is introducing the extremely high stock, with points that come up under the ears. This style has been taken up in New York and is the latest novelty in neckwear lines there.

In the big cities—in Montreal and Toronto—the neckwear situation is somewhat disappointing. Some of the largest stores in both cities refuse to touch any novelties in this line. And this, in spite of the fact that when any extra showing is made, or any job line that is fairly good style is put out, the counter will be lined up three and four deep. One store in each city is said to be making a success of this line. In each case constant window representation is given, and a fine stock of the leading lines and latest novelties stocked.

In chiffon goods the straight-band collar or stock with a lace or ribbon bow is the seller, or else the small pointed stock. To wear with the fancy net and lace blouses, with collar attached, narrow velvet neck-bands, topped with a length of frilling and trimmed with ribbon embroidery, are shown.

For the holiday trade assorted styles of frilling are put up in boxes. In chiffon goods the small stock is the seller. The stock with the jabot end, contrary to the usual custom, is not asked for.

In the better trade lace and chiffon scarves, ostrich, marabout and coque boas are selling for evening and dressy wear.

Umbrellas

The Holiday Trade—Feeling for Handles of Natural Wood, Pearl, Silver and Gold.

The umbrella trade at retail is active, with medium-priced lines doing the business. The feeling for umbrellas, with handles of natural wood, pearl, silver and gold, is strong. The above-mentioned styles in handles are being stocked for the Christmas trade. In umbrellas, if to retail under $4 or $4.50, a fine Gloria covering is preferable to silk. Above that price silk that will give fairly good satisfaction can be secured. Taped edges and covers are being sold for the Holiday season, also neat boxes for delivery purposes.

Trimmings and Braids

Custom Made Suits Trimmed with Braid—The Fancy Vest in Evidence—Japanese Embroideries on Silk and Filet Nets the Novelty Idea

Though the plain tailored suit is so much in evidence, a nice business is being done on braids, galoons, etc. These are used to trim dressy custom-made suits, and dressy costumes. The braids showing are mostly in heavy fancy weaves, and also in fine wood silk and mohair lines for binding purposes, for the binding of coat edges is a leading idea in dressy suit schemes. Fancy braid trimmings, generally showing tinsel effects, are used as a trimming on these cloths, which are of either pastel shades of cloth or of colored velvet.

Trimming lines for Spring run to Japanese embroidered patterns either on silk or on filet grounds. Tinsel is freely used, and gold filet forms the ground work of many trimmings. As these trimmings are expensive their use will be confined to the better trade. Chinelle effects are coming to the fore in the shape of drops and tassels chiefly. Chinelle worked up on a filet ground is a novelty. Drop effects continue to be featured.

Laces

Fair Business Transacted in Laces and Nets —Travelers on the Road with Import Novelties.

There is a good amount of business passing in the retail trade, and in spite of all drawbacks the selling season promises well. Lace is wanted for many uses, as practically no costume is complete without more or less lace elaboration.

All classes of dress nets promise to be big sellers during the Fall months, as they are in immense demand for guimpes, waists and evening gowns. Filet nets, in both white and black, lead.

In the city trade filet laces and laces showing filet introductions are very prominent. Filet net robes are among the novelties featured in the exclusive trade. Princesse is the evening lace. Filet all-overs with Princesse sprigs are shown, and also bands and galons to match.

Travelers are out with samples for import orders for Spring. The leading novelties they are showing have been illustrated and described in previous numbers of The Review. There has not yet been time to particularize just as to what is the trend of Canadian buying. Filet effects, however, are sure to be well taken. Notwithstanding the heavy orders placed for Valenciennes, this lace is still in good demand. Manufacturers are still full of orders and prices continue firm.

A few days ago Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, advertised a cut in the price of standard line of cotton goods. A New York party hearing of the cut wired for 50 cases of standard goods. The Field people, however, wired back that they were not selling outside their regular trade.

THE DIFFERENCE

Tennyson or Longfellow could take a piece of worthless paper, write a poem on it, and make it worth $65,000. That's GENIUS.

Rockefeller can write a few words on a sheet of paper and make it worth $5,000,000. That's CAPITAL.

The British Government can take an ounce of gold and stamp upon it the King's head and make it worth $20.00. That's MONEY.

A mechanic can take raw material worth $5.00 and make it into watch springs worth $1,000. That's SKILL.

A ditch-digger works ten hours a day and handles several tons of earth for $1.25. That's LABOR.

A merchant can take a "TRUE-FIT" Brand Coat that costs $7.00, and sell it for $12.00. That's BUSINESS.

Everybody who is posted buys "TRUE-FIT" Brand Coats. That's GOOD JUDGEMENT. PROVE IT BY SEEING THE SPRING LINES.

A Big Suit Season

The Big Business so Far Done on Suits—The Plain Tailored Suit the Big Seller.

As the season advances, interest deepens in the tailored suit. With the earliest opening days, the tailored suit held the centre of the stage, and proved itself a big seller. There is no abatement as yet, in this interest, and the plain tailored suit promises to end the season in high favor.

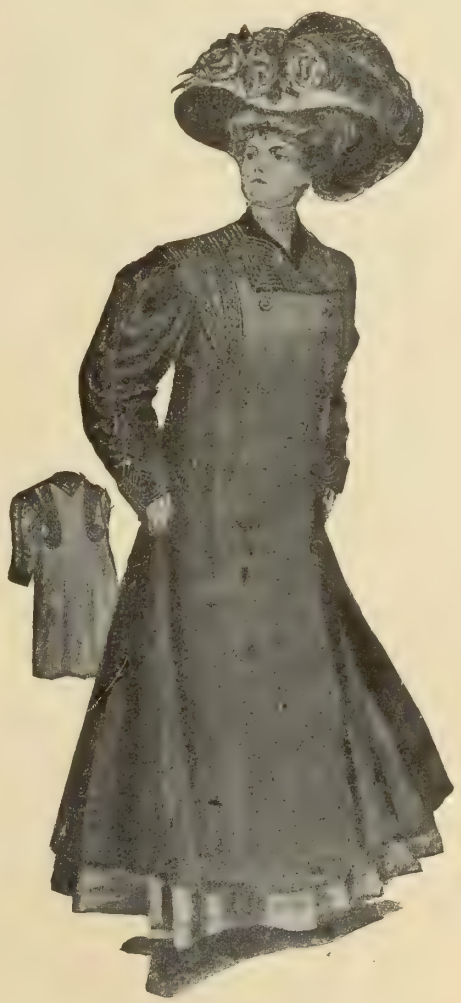
It is the plainly tailored style, in plain cloths, that has sold so well. Broadcloths, boxcloths, etc., are the popular sellers. Though there is considerable showing of fancy effects, they have not been so well taken, as the suit made of plain cloth. These more fanciful styles are made in many instances with longer coats, but the popular length this season certainly is the so-called thumb-length coat.

In the larger centres there has been a considerable inquiry for Prince Chap styles, which seem to be in decidedly short supply. This style has been a leader in New York, ever since the late Spring, but retailers here seem to have overlooked it, when giving Fall orders.

Skirts are all made up in some pleated style, the one most seen being laid in deep pleats, and having from one to three folds of the material as a trimming. Cutaway coat styles are being featured by the custom tailors, a lead that ready-mades will probably follow in the Spring.

Waists

Nets and Laces for the Holiday Trade — Novelties Preparing for Spring Delivery.



For the Christmas trade, dainty lace and net waists are now being shown. Filet is the leading and the popular novelty, but fancy nets and laces are also shown. Filet lace, Cluny, Irish and guipures are the trimming laces used, and one or more kinds accompany valenciennes on most waists. The new kimona and revere, or bretelle, models, are almost exclusively used. Not only are they lace trimmed, but they have strappings, bows, etc., of silk in plain colors and in fancy warp prints.

For the high-class trade next Spring, bordered materials are already featured, and manufacturers are figuring on handsome waists made of bordered goods later.

Practically all waists, with the exception of a few plainly tailored models, are made with the full 3-4 or elbow sleeve.

Staple lines of lawn waists for January and early Spring delivery are nearly all sold now, and, according to all accounts, manufacturers have received satisfactory orders.

The white lawn waist shows no sign of lessened selling strength, and will, no doubt, be the popular garment with the majority of women in the coming summer. This class of waist is now an all-the-year-round seller. It may not be quite so prominent in the Fall and Winter, but it is a staple article for which there is an all-the-year inquiry in most stores.

FALL COAT STYLE.
Manufactured by J. H. Waldman & Co., Montreal.

Designers are now busy with sample lines for the later trade, and novelties that really are different are promised then. Filet embroideries have so far been a great selling success, and promise to be a feature in the Spring and Summer lines. Lovely frontings for making up into waists are now being introduced in these embroideries.

Looking to Spring

Staple Styles in Spring Garments Selling — Speculation as to the Season's Novelty Lines.

Staple styles in Spring garments are now selling, but it is as yet too early to substantiate the season's novelty lines. Ideas have not progressed far enough for any really definite forecast. From the present selling strength of the plain tailored suit, suits of this class produced in appropriate Spring weights and materials, will be big sellers.

The tendency is for plain materials in dark shades, brown, fancy blues, navy, plum, green and wine being the most likely colors. A good deal of interest is developing in stripes. The fabrics chosen are generally of indistinct, subdued effects, or phantom effects in piece-dyed goods. Another novelty shown is in the bordered effects. These will be used for suits, and also for the higher grade of separate skirts. Panamas, taffeta panamas, and fancy twill, chevron and shadow weaves, in worsted suitings, and also cheviots, etc., are safe to be featured as Spring sellers.

The pleated skirt promises to repeat its Fall success, both as a suit skirt and as a separate skirt. The latest shape is the new gored circular. This skirt rejoices in fourteen or more gores. Skirts will still carry folds of materials as a trimming, varied in the case of lightweight fabrics with folds and strappings of silk.

Silk shirtwaist, kimona and bretelle suits, in plain and fancy taffeta, and satin-finished silks, promise to be a larger feature than usual in the Spring line.

Corsets

Spring Styles About Ready—Some Travelers Out in November—Not Much Change in Style.

Corset manufacturers have about completed their ranges of sample lines for the Spring season. Some houses will have travelers on the road with them in November, but it is not anticipated that an extra rush of business will result. Prospects are decidedly good for the Spring season, as retailers' stocks are fairly clear.

There is little change to report in the lines of the popular corset and save for minor changes and improvements, the Spring corsets follow the cut of those now selling.

The long hip, high bust models, are coming more and more into general wear, and instead of being only an incident in the line, are now practically the leading feature. Put on the market at first, as a model for stout figures, the long corset has now come into general use, and is as much in demand for slight figures as for full ones. The reason for this is that the fashionable corset must control both the hips and bust; in fact, it has been officially announced by the dressmakers that hips are no longer fashionable. This, of course, is an extreme idea, but, nevertheless, much of the lacing at the waist has been relinquished in favor of a smooth, tight fit over the hips.

Another point in favor of the long corset is the absence of ridges of flesh around the hips when it is worn. A good deal of skill is demanded from the cutter, in the shaping of this model, as the skirt must be so cut as to be comfortable when the wearer is seated. In many models the boning is not carried to the edge of the skirt, and there is a good deal of skilful curving of the skirt edge in front. Suspenders are more than ever a necessity with this model, and must be of good materials, to be of any use, as the strain upon them is very great.

Whitewear

Novelties in Spring Whitewear now showing Combinations Becoming Popular—Many New Ideas seen.

Retailers are busy selecting novelties in whitewear for January delivery. Though many firms do not hold January sales, or openings, January is the accepted month for the display of new ideas in whitewear.

Owing to the present style of dress, which does not admit of any superfluous folds of material around the waist or hips, the combination idea is gaining great ground in whitewear. For the last two or three seasons manufacturers have been striving, and, with good success, to make combination garments as popular with the medium trade, as they are with the wearers of smart clothes.

One obstacle so far has been the high price put on this class of garment. Of course, combinations cannot be sold as cheaply as just one separate garment. When it is considered that the combination takes the place of two, or even three, separate garments, they ar not unduly high-priced.

The fact that more interest is being taken, and more garments of this class sold, is leading to improved ideas being put on the market. One garment takes the place of three necessary under-garments—corset cover, drawers and petticoat. Though comfortable and easy-fitting there is neither fold, dart, pleat nor gathers to mar its plain, smooth fit over the bust, waist or hips. To the busy woman—the housewife or business woman—the fact that dressing can be made a much quicker process will make a strong appeal. The garment can be slipped on in an instant, and two strings and three buttons are all the necessary fastenings to hold it in place. It is so simply constructed that ironing presents no particular problem, as it opens out flat for that process.

Though handsome garments are manufactured, those at a price not too high for the medium and popular trade are included in the line.

Raincoats

Good Demand for Motor Coats—Sales Increasing.

Trade this month, in raincoat lines, has been fairly active. Orders have been satisfactory to the trade. Repeats have been fair. Many manufacturers are ordering their materials much earlier, so that satisfactory deliveries will be assured.

Very few tweeds are being shown, as the leading cloth is covert. The popular shades are fawns, black, and brown. Silk rubberized waterproofs are expected to be strong for next Spring, as orders up to the present show quite an increased demand. The models this year are shown in a variety of colors and styles. Loose coats with pleated backs, and also plain backs, are shown.

Brown, green, fawn, blue and black are the predominating colors. The popular length is 50 inches. Prices range from $10 to $25 to retail.

The public are becoming more educated, as to the usefulness of motor coats, and there is an increasing demand for smart styles, in this kind of coat.

The styles vary. One which should be popular is a double-breasted, loose-fitting coat, with belt and capuchon silk lined. Another popular style is of dark tweed, with leather trimmings. Materials are principally dark tweeds, in this line. The popular length is 50 inches.

The Fall Coat

More Interest Taken Now in Colored Coats - Heavy Selling Has Not Yet Commenced.

The free selling of a practical style of Fall suit and the absence of any really cold weather so far, have hindered the sale of separate coats this Fall. The style idea still inclines to the loose, easy models, in 3-4 and longer lengths. With the city trade, the very loose backs are giving way to more shaped models. Though these models, to a certain extent, define the figure, they are very far from being a fitted style. These show modifications of the Japanese shoulder, and have decidedly roomy armholes. Madam has provided herself with a more closely fitting garment in the suit that she is wearing, and requires a coat that will serve all wrap purposes.

Very many black coats are shown, but colored ones, notably brown, and the new wine shades, are being very much inquired for. More lined coats are seen than for many season's past. White, grey and black satins and serges are the popular linings.

A sprinkling of caracul coats, in pony and other fancy styles, is seen. These are handsome little garments and promise some prominence later. In the States this class of coat has been made up in large quantities, and promises to be a feature.

Spring Samples Now Showing

Travelers on the Road in the East and West — Skirt Lines Showing for Spring.

Coat manufacturers, in Canadian garment centres, have Spring samples on the road, both in the west, and far east, and a few lines in Ontario. Principal coat styles are Prince Chap, mannish and long tight-fitting coats. These models are being well received all along the line. Eton and pony models are not very largely represented in Spring lines. Colors predominating are brown, striped brown, and mixtures in browns. Striped covert cloths are popular, and are selling well, but plain coverts are not up to expectations. Some greyish effects are seen, black is also represented. The double cape effects are good sellers.

Skirt manufacturers are showing many lines for Spring. These will be added to, as the season progresses. As yet there are very few opinions expressed, but some idea of the styles shown may be gained from the following.

Walking Skirts.

The demand for Spring walking skirts promises to be large. Venetian cloth is very fashionable. The colors in vogue, are navies, browns, cardinals and the staple black. Flare-gored skirts with pleated fronts and backs, are meeting with success. The new models are trimmed with bias folds, in different warfis. The usual walking lengths are again to the fore.

All lines of dress skirts are as usual popular. Materials in high favor are chiffon, panama, voiles and fine serges. In some lines, striped serges are having preference. Stylish colors are browns and navies. The pleated skirt, with silk trimmings, is again predominating

The British Markets

News from Bradford, Manchester, Nottingham, and Belfast.

Canada is not the only country in which the season has been a trying one, and the number of London firms whose net returns have failed to reach those of last year would, if given, be a large one.

"Selfrige's," the Anglo-American firm, who are projecting the new store for London, are meeting with many difficulties in putting up their building. Much of the delay has been due to the fact that a second set of plans had to be prepared, before the Building Committee of the London County Council would grant a permit. Trouble has also been encountered in securing other necessary permits. These difficulties are in a fair way to be settled, and when this is done the work will be pushed as quickly as possible. As a matter of fact, only part of the foundations are as yet complete.

The London silk market remains firm, but little business is passing. Advices from the east do not point to any weak spots there. Seven million bales of the fourth crop are reported available, against 11,000,000 last year, from Canton. Much gambling is reported on the Chinese market.

A petition from both native Japanese and foreign representative merchants has been presented to the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, in Yokohama, for the establishing of a conditioning house for Habutais. Not only is it asked that quality and weight should be examined, but also that the standard of humidity should be fixed.

The European silk markets are quiet, but the fact that there is no lessening of the manufacturing activity is giving a feeling of confidence, and is helping to sustain prices.

Bradford.

Wool is still advancing. The last series of London sales brought out the fact that wool was still wanted. Buyers were eager, and competition keen. The Bradford market was not altogether unprepared for the upward tendency of prices, For several weeks back combers—especially of fine merino wools—have been able to obtain slight advances in price each market day.

Cables from Australasia, where the new wool season is just commencing, report a big attendance of buyers at the opening sales. Competition, particularly for the best brands of merino wool, is reported very keen. French buyers are securing the majority of the better lots. Cross-breds continue to advance. Better classes of merino, compared with last year, show an improvement of fully 10 per cent. Medium lots are from 10 per cent to 15 per cent. higher. The finer grades of cross-breds fetched, in some cases, as much as 15 per cent. over last year's prices, while inferior lots averaged an advance of 10 per cent.

The manufacturing end, in Bradford and district, is very active, but the high price of wool is changing the class of goods turned out. Looms that were once kept running, solely on staple Bradford fabrics are now turned onto many kinds of plain and fancy cloths, principally for the shipping trade.

In recognition of the immense importance of the woolen interests that centre in Bradford, the title of Lord Mayor has been conferred on Bradford's chief magistrate. The ceremonies, held in the City Hall, were most interesting. Alderman J. A. Godwin is Bradford's first Lord Mayor.

The Cravenette Co. have removed their offices from Booth street to Leeds Road.

Manchester.

Trade is steady in the distributing houses, though there is some complaint as to tardy buying. This is in a measure caused by the fact that American cotton is a penny a pound cheaper now than it was a month ago. It is the spinners that are keeping up prices, as they have full control of the situation. It is still in the finer numbers where business is harder to arrange. The manufacturing end is not so well off, and it is said that in some cases orders are being accepted that leave little or no margin of profit, to keep looms running.

Though business is still difficult to arrange, owing to high prices, there is more doing in the eastern markets, that are such large buyers of Manchester goods.

Nottingham.

Nottingham's prosperity seems to be almost without a cloud at present, though possibly the high price of cotton yarns is considered as one by many manufacturers. Yarn prices, in spite of buyers' efforts to reduce them, are still unprecedentedly high. Though there is no particular rush on, factories are busy, and many makers have all the forward orders they care to undertake. Prices for all popular laces, and allied lines, continue very firm. Narrow Valenciennes, torchons, Clunys, Maltese and square-hole laces are most in demand. There is a big call for allover nets.

The annual Goose Fair, held on October 3rd, occasioned the closing of most warehouses and factories.

The City Council and the Chamber of Commerce are investigating the workings of continental schools of design. This is a branch that is in great need of improvement, as there is a lamentable dearth of up-to-date patterns in Nottingham-made goods.

Belfast.

There is no doubt that the present high prices are restricting trade. Orders received are all for small quantities, though, in the aggregate, they total up respectably. Spinners still have full control of the situation, and are in a position to enforce their demands. The new flax is in the market. It is of fair quality, and prices have advanced somewhat.

The export trade is quiet, the demand from the States not being up to expectations.

The faking of linen cloths is a subject that is claiming a certain amount of attention. Linen now is a tempting mark, as prices are so high. Cotton, or other cheap materials, are mixed with linen, in the weaving. Cotton warps are tinted the same color as linen, and so cleverly is this done that experts are often deceived. Coarse household linens and dress linens are often faked in this way.

Goods are put on the market, with deceptive names, such as Antrim linen, Donegal linen, Belfast lawn, etc. The inference left, for the public to draw, is that they are of pure flax, whereas they generally contain little or none of that material.

Turn Stocks Frequently

To say anything in favor of the principle that mercantile stocks should be bought only in quantities that will allow of a quick turning is arguing in favor of a truism.

I have never yet heard a reputable argument advanced against it.

Hardly a merchants but will say "yes" when asked if he does not believe in the principle. So it seems almost a waste of time and space to present any views in its favor.

The advantages to be derived from following that principle are so strong that, to my mind, they are unanswerable, and those advantages are recognized by the best and shrewdest merchants in the country.

tt has been my lot to know of cases where the idea of quick turning was carried out—some of them through intimate personal acquaintance, and others through knowledge gained that I consider absolutely reliable—and the names of those houses, if given, would be an unanswerable argument in favor of what I may say.

One may speak from his own experience or from a full appreciation of the ideals that he hopes to attain, and from these standpoints I submit the following suggestions or principles, call them what you will.

First—A well-assorted stock often replenished.

Second—No old stock allowed to accumulate.

Third—A saving on interest account and an addition to your profits.

Fourth—Better credit for the merchant.

Fifth—Buyers worth more to you and to themselves when following the first and second propositions.

Taking my first proposition: "A well-assorted stock often replenished." What customers wish to see is the latest in merchandise. The old has no interest for them. All they can see are the goods displayed upon your counters and shelves.

The duplicate stock in the basement or attic might as well be at the North Pole for all that they know about it, and yet that duplicate stock is eating its head off in interest, and depreciation. I do not care what the condition of the market, goods in duplicate begin to depreciate the minute they are stowed away. This may seem a rash and radical statement in the face of the heavy advances that we have had, and yet this idea hammered into my head by one of the best merchants of his day, I have never been able to dispute successfully.

A smooth-talking traveling man comes along with his stories of rises in the market or that your friend or competitor has bought a case or more of a certain article or articles, and he has induced you to say "Yes," when you really meant "No." This result multiplied gives you anxious days and nights. It sounds very large to say, "I'll take a case," but when after several operations of that kind you visit the bank you wonder if the bank officers really look at it as you did. It sounds so sharp and shrewd to say, "I bought from the manufacturer and saved 5 to 7 per cent. I buy direct," but your interest account grows by night as well as by day. "It neither slumbers nor sleeps."

I believe fully from experience that speculation in mercantile stocks is as harmful to a great degree as speculation in railroad, mining or other stocks.

Your buyers do not all believe this way, but if they were forced to pay the bills there would be many startling and remarkable conversions. It would then be realized that the "Old Man" perhaps had some grains of business sense left.

I believe fully that it is better to pay railroad fares, freight and express through often visits to the market than it is to pay interest and depreciation on stocks and a heavier insurance. It is better to be short on goods and long on cash than to be long on goods and short on cash, and these days of near markets will help square both propositions.

Give the assortment, but cut the quantities.

Ten dozen assorted in ten different styles are better than two dozen each in ten different styles and the bill is easier to pay. Buy on style more than you do on price on all fancy goods.

My second proposition: "No old stock allowed to accumulate." And these accumulations come from not following out my first proposition.

It is remarkable what a feeling of attachment there seems to be in the minds of many business men towards their accumulation of old stock. They look at those old familiar prices of merchandise and wonder how they can ever part with them except at full price. Season in and season out that attachment grows, and while attachments of some kind are excellent, attachments of another kind can grow out of those same chestnuts.

Heavy buying leads to "tail ends," and the heavier the buying the longer and larger the "tails."

I say that merchandise, good or bad, whether on shelves or in the stock room, is a constant menace to the good merchant, staring him boldly out of countenance and destroying his nervous system.

Get rid of it! The cash thus obtained and used in buying new and seasonable goods will in its profit making more than offset any loss the old merchandise may have caused you.

My third proposition: "Quick turning stocks a saving in your interest account and an addition to your profits."

Self evident. You do $200,000 yearly and carry a stock of $100,000. You ought to do it on $75,000 anyway. 6 per cent. on $25,000 less stock is $1,500 saved. Why pay it to the banks or to the man who sells you goods?

I put the figures high when I say $75,000 for your stock, but even at $75,000 your assortment can be as good as though it was $100,000. Five pieces of cotton in your shelves show just as good to your customer as five pieces in your shelves and five pieces in your stock room. The same principle applies all round. There is no need of enlargement on the theme. It would be a waste of words.

Robert G. Ingersoll said that "The frying pan is the bane of American civilization."

The good merchant can truly say that "The large stock room is the bane of mercantile life."

My fourth proposition, "Better credit for the merchant." Why argue it? It's an axiom. The other propositions have simply led up to it. If there is any doubt, ask your creditors. A bank balance belonging to yourself and not borrowed from your bank's funds talks very loud. Its voice is piercing and insistent.

Fifth and lastly, "Buyers are worth more to you and to themselves when following the first and second propositions."

They will try to argue you out of your belief, but if by hard work and grim determination you once get the initial principle instilled into them you'll have to pay them more money after converting them, but you'll be glad to do it.

I have skimmed along the outer edges of a very important theme. I have seen the application of all I have written, and I care for no greater business reward than to be able to carry out in the business which I represent that which has made for success in marked cases that have come under my own observation.

"I speak that which I do know; I testify to that which I have seen."—L. E. Bennink, in the Apparel Retailer.

Neckwear

Narrower Widths are Spoken of — Christmas Trade and Better Lines Than Usual.

Brisk business is always done on neckwear at Christmas time, and there is no retailer who cannot sell a much better quality of goods than usual. The use of fancy boxes generally stimulates trade considerably. These should not bear the name of the dealer on the cover, but, instead, a neat design of some sort. A business card may be dropped inside. Customers would appreciate this.

There is a marked tendency to lessen the width of the tie, which has averaged 2¼ to 2½ inches at the most. From the 3 to 3½-inch they are coming to narrower limits. There is also a desire to manufacture from a higher class material generally. A Toronto house has been showing a fine holiday range of samples of "reps" in myrtle green, medium red, etc., etc. The effects are striking with the brilliant group of stripes—some in basket weave being made more so by their dark grounds. The diagonal treatment of these high-priced "reps" is sure to gain favor. The latest, however, are cross stripes, which are added to the bias and length stripes in 2 inch widths. These newer cross stripes are made up in square-end four-in-hands.

As regards four-in-hands, some U. S. stores, who do a fashionable trade, are showing a 2¾-inch width. They are said to have little or no demand for anything wider. One Fifth avenue shop has brought out for the first time, a graduated folded-in-four-in-hand, which is expected to produce a small knot as desired by their clientele in this tie. Among the manufacturers there one house is showing to its trade a line of cravats to retail at from $1 to $2. This is a folded Emglish square of an all-over figured pattern, with wide ends, which is included among the quick sellers, as a demand for finer quality in these goods is becoming brisk.

The most active colors on the Canadian market are reds, greens and browns.

Spring Shirts

The Colors and Patterns That Have Been Favored — Some New York Notes.

In Spring shirts the colors selling are blue, tan, corn, gray, heliotrope, green and pink. Bright color stripes on color grounds, and two and three toned stripes and figures on white grounds, plain, corded and self-figured Madras, in printed effects are all favored.

Taffeta flannel, a wool fabric, said to be unshrinkable, that is of remarkable texture, possessing the weight of fine quality flannel shirting, yet being as filmy and light to the touch as a zephyr madras, is being introduced into negligee or outing shirts, house gowns and pyjamas. The weave is end-and-end, the color grounds being a thread of color woven with one of white, and the patterns are color stripes on white and color grounds, the fabric in aspect and touch being more like fine madras than flannel, and without the flannel "feel," hence its name "taffeta flannel." The cloth has been made up in the garments mentioned above by a metropolitan furnisher.

The following is from New York: "Exclusive custom makers are frank to state that corded weaves will be plentiful; that scroll, panel and embroidered patterns will be put forward conspicuously, and that purples, tans and greens will be the favored colors. The newest garments have generously wide box pleats, the edges of which meet. The effect is almost the same as stiff bosom so far as starchiness and disinclination to crumple are concerned. No stock is taken in the rumors, based upon reports of the new turnings of the mode abroad, that pleated shirts will be taken up for formal wear.

"Apparently the pleated front sort will figure more prominently on orders than ever before. The trend in its favor has been a remarkable development of the past year. For some months it was not clear in what direction popular fancy would turn. The only positive fact was the decline of the stiff-bosom kind. High-class custom makers were the first to note the increased vogue of the pleated shirt, and, as usual, the crowd followed not very far behind. So the likelihood is that buyers will give it the preference in future bills."

THE KING'S COSTUMES.

M. A. P. gives us some interesting sartorial particulars of King Edward. He has never been guilty of eccentricities in the matter of dress, nor does he ever wear anything that would markedly distinguish him from other well dressed men: jewelry, is an article of male adornment, he abhors. His beard is well trimmed, his hat, coat, trousers, and boots fit him to perfection. All is unobtrusive and irreproachable. And yet, despite this subdued note, King Edward is, without doubt, the best dressed man in Europe. There is a general but quite mistaken impression that the King wears a suit upon one occasion only. As he wears three suits a day this would mean about a thousand suits a year. M.A.P. continues: "The idea has arisen probably from the fact that he is never seen in the same suit twice in succession, an arrangement made possible by the enormous size of his wardrobe, which is being continually augmented at the rate of about thirty suits a year. At his various residences he has stored away some 300 suits, in addition to numerous uniforms, all ready for instant service. The King's knowledge of tailoring technique is considerable. He is well acquainted with the respective merits of cheviots, Saxons, diagonals, and checks. He does not pay such extravagant prices for his clothes as may be supposed. For a pair of trousers he gives from $10 to $12.50; for a lounge suit $50, and for an evening suit, $75. These are high prices for the average rich man, but plenty of society men pay as much. Altogether the King's yearly clothes bill amounts to about $6,000. His uniforms are the most expensive considerations. He is honorary colonel of over thirty regiments, and he must have a uniform for each. He has at least 100 uniforms, all ready for use at any moment."

Hats and Caps

Good Business on Spring Lines — There is Nothing Very New in the Way of Styles.

Travelers have been out with Spring hat lines, and they report a good business in all directions. Looking ahead as far as is possible, it is now safe to say that the coming Spring will see nothing very startling in the way of new lines. The brims of hard felts are showing a tendency to be smaller, and the crowns are high. This more particularly applies to the faddy shaped hat worn by young men. It is generally expected other hats will show but little change.

In soft felts the telescope has come to be looked upon as something of a staple. It will be worn next year with very little change from the shapes of last season. The attempt made to popularize the straw telescope has not met with success. It is not expected that much of a business will be done in this line. A very neat hat is being shown in the form of a knockabout straw. It is shaped very much like the telescope, although it does not telescope into itself, as does the hat of that name. The hat has a brim of moderate width which can be turned up or down all round. The hat is likely to be a favorite next season, particularly with young men.

There has recently been quite a good demand for golf caps. After all varieties of cloth caps come into use and been accepted to a very limited extent, the "golfer" is once more coming to its own. Some very effective checks and tweeds are being shown.

THE READY-TO-WEAR TRADE.

The ready-to-wear trade at retail is very good, and orders for Spring, at wholesale, are satisfactory, everything considered. As on all other lines, merchants are buying cautiously. However, the trade is expanding rapidly, and the output of manufactories will be a great deal larger than ever before.

The Review has often advised merchants to get the best goods on the market. This cannot be too strongly impressed upon them, for it is only through high-class garments that a large business can be built up.

H. S. Albright, dress goods buyer, the W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Montreal, returned last month from a trip in the interests of the firm.

J. H. Keeler is the new manager of Frank & Bryce Co., Limited, Montreal. Mr. Keeler is from the New York offices of the lines represented by this firm.

L. Stuffmann, of Konig & Stuffmann, Montreal, sailed for Europe last month. He will visit the principal markets and will return about the middle of December.

R. A. Brock, of the W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Montreal, went on a flying business trip to Toronto, last month. B. Cronin, of the Toronto house, was in Montreal.

J. H. Palmer, buyer for Debenhams (Canada), Limited, Montreal, returned last month from his continental buying trip, and is enthusiastic concerning many of the lines purchased.

J. Mandleberg & Co., Limited, Montreal, have sold their Canadian business to the Imperial Rubber Co., of Montreal. Business will be carried on as usual in the same premises. 2 Lemoine street.

James Alardice, late of Frank & Bryce, Limited, Montreal, has gone into the wholesale clothing business, having identified himself with Mr. Wheeler. The firm name is now Wheeler, Alardice & Company, Limited.

A. Markus, of the Standard Umbrella Mfg. Co., Montreal, was in New York last month. Mr. Markus went in search of new styles for the holiday and Spring trade. Although a young man, he has a thorough acquaintance with the umbrella trade.

Geo. B. Fraser, director of Greenshields, Limited, is again in Montreal, returning last month from an extended foreign trip. Mr. Fraser supervised the buying for the various departments. His wife and daughter accompanied him.

J. W. Blanchet, who conducts a men's furnishing store at 391 Notre Dame street west, Montreal, was robbed of goods to the value of $1,000 or $1,500 towards the end of last month. At the time of going to press detectives were on the case.

E. B. Wallace is now in charge of the linen and handkerchief department of Greenshields, Limited, Montreal. Mr. Wallace has had an extensive and varied experience in the dry goods trade, having been identified with such firms as Wyld, Darling Co., and Gordon, McKay & Co., Toronto.

Work on the five-storey structure of the Standard Shirt Mfg. Co., Delormier avenue, Montreal, is being rapidly completed and the laundry department will likely be occupied this month. The factory, 80x235 ft., is one of the most modern in America, and when completed will give this concern much needed additional space.

A. A. Gagnier, Eastern representative of the Toronto Carpet Manufacturing Co., Toronto, is now in the Maritime Provinces taking orders for Spring delivery. Mr. Gagnier expects to reach Quebec and Montreal the latter end of the month. J. G. Paquet, also with this firm, is now traveling through Ontario, also taking orders for Spring.

A. J. Dugal, manager and buyer of dress goods and staple department, W. H. Scroggie, Limited, Montreal, left towards the end of last month for European markets. Mr. Dugal will visit all the important manufacturing centres, such as Ireland, Scotland, England, France and Switzerland. He expects to return a few days before Christmas.

ONTARIO.

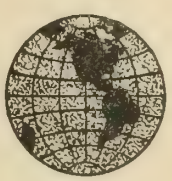
The late Rev. J. Gillespie, to whom a memorial was erected recently, was formerly in the wholesale fur and hat trade, in Toronto, the style of the firm being Gillespie, Ainsley & Martin.

Oriental Textile, Limited, is the style of a new manufacturing plant at Streetsville, Ontario. The firm, which has a good size factory in operation, is manufacturing various grades of velours and are selling direct to the manufacturers and jobbers.

MARITIME PROVINCES.

J. D. Jones, representing Bertram, Harvey & Co., of London, Eng., has recently been through the Maritime Provinces. He is enthusiastic as to the outlook for the expansion of the Canadian dry goods trade.

William Green, traveler, for the fur house of Redmond & Co., died at St. John of pneumonia. He was born in Toronto forty-five years ago, and was well known throughout a large part of Canada. He is survived by his wife, one son and one daughter.



Fire broke out in the dry goods store of Wilson & Brawn, Amherst and the stock of $20,000 was so badly damaged that it will be almost a total loss. There was about $2,000 worth of damage done the building. Insurance on stock amounts to $8,000, and on the building to $10,000.

Carpets

Merchants Buying on the Hand-to-Mouth Plan — Big Repeats Expected Later.

At the present writing carpet conditions in retail establishment are as good as during the corresponding season of last year, this, notwithstanding the sharp advances on all carpet lines during the last twelve months. Managers of this department in large city stores state that business in all lines is above expectations. Fall trade is in full swing now, and has been ever since the holiday-loving public returned to their respective homes.

The demand for three-quarter piece goods is fair. Colors predominating are greens, fawns and wood shades in general lines. The softer tones in greens, creams and chintzes continue to hold first position in better grade goods. During the last two years the demand has been exceptionally strong for wood shades, and the present season shows no sign of diminishment. Floral effects are much sought for at present. The feeling is also strong for conventional designs. Two-tones for bedrooms are also to the fore. In many cases the two-tone green effect, in scroll designs, is in good request for drawing-rooms. Oriental patterns, always staple, continue to be used largely for halls, stairs and dining-rooms. In one or two cases, these designs are also in demand for drawing-room purposes, especially in high-grade carpets. Brussels, Wiltons and Axminsters, in three-quarter bodies, two-quarter, three-quarter and four-quarter stairs, are selling well in the better class goods. Tapestries and wool squares, or seamless art carpets, are doing well at present. Merchants have placed strongly on these lines, as they suit the popular trade.

With the Manufacturers.

Manufacturers find that merchants are only placing on the hand-to-mouth principle. The late Spring, and the exceptionally bad weather which continued right through the Summer months, when the crop was in condition to be harvested, together with the cold and rainy weather towards the latter end of the Summer months, and, in fact, right up to the present writing, explains the fact, to some extent, that merchants have not been over-anxious about placing large orders. Taking all in all, the business transacted can only be classed as fair.

Domestic Lines.

Of late years Canadian manufacturers of carpets are rapidly forging to the front. At present they state that they have about reached the highest standard as regards the manufacture of carpets. Brussels, Wiltons and wool carpets are shown in many pretty designs, color effects and novelties. Their latest range compares with anything yet shown to the trade. The colors are of the richest effect obtainable. Further, they also state that they have at last reached a standard which enables them to freely guarantee lasting qualities.

In an interview with the eastern representative of one of Canada's leading manufacturers of carpets, The Review went through the entire stock, and was surprised to see the exceptionally fine range now being shown to the trade for Spring business. From the present outlook the time is not far off when Canada will manufacture everything required by Canadians in this line.

In wholesale circles, last month, travelers were all on the road, and are now straggling back from their Spring trips. Latest reports as to the effect that initial orders were not nearly so heavy as last year, one jobber, in explanation, states that last year, before the large advances in price took place, many merchants bought heavily, and, as a result, with the high prices now ruling, are only covering immediate wants. However as the season progresses, it is generally expected that things will brighten up, and heavy repeats will be in order.

The price condition in carpets is firm. Some grades have advanced from 15 to 20 per cent. over figures ruling one year ago. This advance is principally in tapestries and low grade Brussels.

Rugs

Demand for These Goods is Brisk and Grows Steadily Year by Year.

With the jobbers the demand for rugs is as big as ever. All lines are to the fore. Ingrains, in conventional and floral designs, are selling well. Tapestry rugs, for general trade, are also in demand, especially in medium and better qualities. Brussels rugs, while being asked for to a certain extent, are not selling as expected. Wilton and Axminster rugs in better class goods, are doing well. Merchants are ordering more of these rugs year by year, as designs are of the best and wearing qualities cannot be excelled.

Canadian manufacturers are finding the trade for rugs and squares increasing year by year. Of late, many of the new houses contain hardwood flooring. In others, which have had old wood floors in many cases, parquetry flooring is being installed. Rugs are quite adapted to this style of flooring, and this may be used as one of the reasons for the brisk demand for rugs and squares. Colors are greens, reds, blues and orientals. Smyrna rugs, Canadian manufacture, are perfect copies of old Persian and Turkish goods.

WALL PAPER REPUTATION.

Dealer, aim to make your store THE correct place for people to buy their wall paper. Once you have established a reputation for this, it is not so difficult to keep it up. Take any city you like and you will find there three or four stores of outstanding importance in their particular lines. These are the correct places to patronize if you want to be in the style. Prices are undoubtedly high, but the public is willing to pay high prices just to be considered correct.

In the wall paper business this reputation means a great deal to the ultimate success of a merchant. To secure it three or four things are essential.

A good selection of goods is very necessary. You must have fashionable lines to show your customers. They must be brought to understand that what you are showing them is the right thing in the large centres. Then they will trust your judgment and will refer their acquaintances to you.

A clean, bright show room, with the latest facilities for displaying goods and with comfortable chairs for your patrons, is needful, if you would have the good word of your customers. Politeness and courtesy in your treatment of these customers must be added to make a strong combination.

A continuity of business on the same scale as that on which you set out becomes necessary. It is all very well to begin well, but unless you keep up your record, the public will lose confidence in you.

West Buys the Best

A Better Class of Goods Sold There Than in the Western States.

"I admire your nerve. Here with a small population scattered through the great Northwest of Canada, you have stocked a lot of high-class goods, such as we would never think of stocking, for sale in the Western States, where we have many times your population. We would never think of carrying such goods, and you have put in a heavy stock of them. I like to see a firm that has plenty of nerve, but really don't you think you have done some exceedingly reckless buying?"

"We are not merely buying these goods; we are selling them," was the reply. "Where does our nerve come in?"

The head of a large wholesale dry goods house doing business exclusively in the Western States was being shown through the house furnishings department of a Winnipeg wholesale dry goods house, and his examination of carpets, selling wholesale at $3.00 per yard, and other high-priced goods, was responsible for the remarks above quoted. As he examined the stock carried in other departments his astonishment was not diminished, and he went away thoroughly convinced either that Winnipeg wholesale managers are fools or that the people of the Canadian West will buy a class of goods too expensive for sale in the Western States.

Now, the Winnipeg wholesale houses have been in business for a long time, as time is reckoned in a country of new things, and their business is growing so rapidly that already they are finding their big warehouses too small for their requirements. They are supplying the Western market with goods, and, presumably, they know their business. They would not buy large stocks of high-class, expensive goods were they not convinced, from previous experience, that their market will absorb them.

It is a fact the truth of which can be vouched for by those who are thoroughly familiar with conditions on both sides of the line, that the people of the Canadian West are large purchasers of high-class goods which would be unsalable in the Western States. Western Canada is more prosperous and the people spend their money more freely.

A wholesale house selling in the West has to carry a great variety of goods. There is a foreign population pouring in that is not yet accustomed to Canadian standards of living, and for whom a cheap line of goods must be provided; but the same firm must also carry a large stock of the most expensive lines to satisfy the demands of the big proportion of the population. Western Canada buys the best and the Western Canadian market is rapidly growing.

OILCLOTHS AND LINOLEUMS.

Just now the oilcloth and linoleum trade is good. Owing to the advance in carpets the feeling for oilcloth has increased considerably. The favorite width just now seems to be 16-4, while a few years ago very few patterns of this width were sold. The 8-4 is also to the fore, but of late many merchants prefer handling 16-4 width, as they claim it cuts to better advantage. At present checks and florals are in demand, especially in lighter shades. The feeling for inlaids is as good as ever.

Prices continue high and are expected to remain so for some time, judging by market conditions just now.

THE NEW COTTON COMPANY.

Some time ago The Mount Royal Spinning Co. started the erection of a mill at the Montreal suburb of Cote St. Paul. At the present moment the buildings are rapidly approaching completion. When work is finished the mill will be one of the most modern and best equipped of its kind in Canada.

The site, consisting of fourteen acres, fronts on Lachine Canal, with the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway running into the yards.

The mills, when complete, will contain the mill proper, about 360x130 feet; storehouse, with office adjoining; boiler, engine and pump houses. Just now plans are being drawn for a modern and up-to-date bleaching and printing plant.

Gray cloths, sheetings, white cottons, and also dyed and printed goods will be the output of these mills.

The directors of the company comprise men who are among the most capable and business-like to be found in Montreal, the president being William C. McIntyre; vice-president, James W. Pyke, and managing director, William T. Whitehead.

EUROPEAN COTTON SPINNERS IN TORONTO.

One hundred and twenty cotton spinners of Great Britain and Europe paid Toronto a visit on Saturday afternoon. They represented 76,000,000 spindles, practically all the important cotton mills of Great Britain and th Continent. They were on their way back after attending the second international convention of cotton planters and spinners, held at Atlanta, Georgia, early in October, to which they had gone as delegates from the International Federation of Master Cotton Spinners' and Manufacturers' Associations. It was probably the most cosmopolitan party that ever visited Toronto. It included sixty-four cotton men from England, twenty from Germany, and delegates from France, Austria, Italy, Belgium, Spain and Portugal. The federation also comprises Switzerland and Japan.

The tourists were headed by C. W. Macara, of Manchester. He is head of Henry Bannerman & Sons, Limited, a concern capitalized at £6,000,000, and he is a cousin of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman.

The party were met by the Civic Reception Committee, and greetings were extended at the City Hall by Mayor Coatsworth, and at the Parliament Buildings by Premier Whitney. In the evening they were entertained at dinner by the Toronto branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

There was an expression of melancholy, tinged with resentment, on the old lady's face as she entered the grocer's shop and came to a standstill before the proprietor.

"I want," she began impressively, "to talk to you about them eggs I had last week. They weren't anything like as fresh as they might have been."

"That's strange," replied the grocer, who fancied himself as something of a wag. "We always have an almanac hanging up in the fowl run to keep the hens up to date."

"Oh!" came the retort, with crushing emphasis. "Then all I have to say is that somebody with brains about as addled as them eggs, has been misleadin' the hens with last year's calendar. Just you hang up a March, 1907, card, my good feller, and maybe them chickens 'ull start workin' overtime to ketch up to it!"

WHERE DO YOU COME IN ON THREADS?

You don't come in at all on profits, if you are handling threads made by foreign trusts. By the time the combines and rings have boosted up the wholesale prices, and the custom house has collected duty, there's nothing left for the retailer.

DOMINION THREADS

are "square deal" threads. There's no duty to pay on them, and they are made by the one independent company in Canada. We sell them direct to dealers at prices that, net one cent more a spool than threads made by the trust.

COTTONS

THE BACKBONE OF YOUR BUSINESS

You sell more yards of Cotton than any other textile you handle. Well, doesn't it stand to reason that if you give your customers the best of Cottons, your customers will give you the best of their business?

Look carefully over the Cottons you are giving your customers now. Then see the Kingcot lines.

More merchants are finding out every day that in the Kingcot lines they can give their customers fresher patterns, newer weaves, more value for their money.

The Kingcot lines include:—

Ginghams	Awnings
Dress Goods	Shirtings
Apron Ginghams	Oxfords
Saxonys	Denims
Flannelettes	Galateas
Domets	Tickings

Cottonades

Any traveller for any good house can show you the Kingcot lines.

Staples and Raw Materials

Jobbers Stock - Taking This Month — Place Orders Early— Whites and Greys Advanced 7½ Per Cent. — General Trade Conditions.

Jobbers in various Canadian centres, particularly where inventory is taken at the end of the month, are anticipating a record business in staples. The general trade conditions, notwithstanding slightly unfavorable weather, are fair. While collections, particularly in the West, are slow, jobbers do not expect this to interfere with the retail trade. At the present writing special preparations and efforts are being made to bring customers to the warehouses, and leading firms expect a big month. At present, there are not many jobs to be disposed of, but the dating concessions will appeal to many merchants.

Among the Jobbers.

Wholesale houses are making preparations in all lines of staple goods for the Spring season of 1908. These preparations are naturally along expanding lines, and as a result, the display of samples is as elaborate as the market conditions will allow. Whites and grays will be prominent where sufficient stocks are to be had. Inquiry for these lines is very strong, and for all goods of the same class.

Buy Early.

As the values in all lines of staple goods continue very firm, with manufacturers inclined to advance their prices merchants who have not already placed their orders should do so at once. Those who anticipate distant needs may be sure of prompt deliveries. From present conditions of the market the advice from The Review is to anticipate wants as quickly as possible.

The price lists recently issued by the manufacturers for Spring business may appear high, but this is largely due to the fact that the jobbers, in many cases, have given their customers the advantage of the price situation for Fall. Jobbers bought heavily early in the season, and have not advanced their prices from time to time as most of the mills have done.

Ginghams for Spring.

Owing to the prices being high on prints, the trade, generally, looks forward to a large sale of ginghams, particularly in the line to retail at 12½c. There is nothing very new in the way of patterns. Cord checks will be in use as much as ever, and plain chambrays, in shades of blue and pink, will meet with ready sale, as these lines were extremely scarce at the end of last season.

Spring Prints.

Many of the houses have by now started in with print lines for Spring. As yet, it is difficult to say how business will be, but the fact that most stocks in the country are light, leads us to expect a satisfactory turnover in the print department, notwithstanding high prices. Many of the English printers have declined to supply their regular accounts with as much stuff as they require, as most of them are offering goods at a very low margin of profit, so as not to have their lines withdrawn from this market.

Whites and Grays for Next Season.

The price situation is acute on both whites and grays. Jobbers are keeping prices down as much as possible. An advance of 7½ per cent. occurred last month in all lines. From all appearances the jobbers are expecting still higher prices in the near future. This recent advance, however, will not affect 1908 retail trade, but surely will that of next Fall, unless the market conditions change before the buying season is at hand. Deliveries for Spring wil be bad, although most merchants have already anticipated their wants. Deliveries have been bad for import and English deliveries, which used to be right up to the mark, are now away behind schedule. Stocks in jobbers' hands are fairly depleted, but merchants who ordered early will get deliveries of goods. From present conditions repeats will be very bad. There are no jobs flying around, nor will there be for some time to come.

Gray Bengal is selling well. Many initial orders show a brisk inquiry for this line. Underwear finish, in white cotton, is also to the fore. All other lines are only normal, with most of them slow.

Conditions at Retail.

Business transacted at retail just now is far from being up to the expectation of the merchant. The bad weather recently experienced is in part, the cause. At present retailers find no special demand for any one line. Many of them state that Canadian manufacturers are meeting all requirements this year. Further, they state that the various lines shown them for Spring are up to the highest standard, with designs much improved. Deliveries are fair, but prices continue high.

Manufacturers Busy.

Mills are busy just now executing orders for Spring. There is at present, manufacturers assert, a regrettable shortage of help, which is hampering the output materially. From present conditions it is advisable to anticipate future requirements while there is a possible chance that prices will not decline, and manufacturers are quite frank in stating that the orders in the future will be slow in delivery.

ADDITION TO YARMOUTH MILL.

A large addition, 106x76 feet, to the Cosmos Cotton Mills, Yarmouth, N.S., is rapidly nearing completion. There is also a wing 44x65 feet, and an engine and boiler house 50x75 feet. The new sections will give 30,000 square feet extra floor space, and will mean the employment of about 75 more hands. At present the staff numbers 275, and they pay roll is about $1,700 weekly.

Charles Duncan, of Charles Duncan & Sons, Limited, Brantford, died early last month. This house is an exclusive house furnishing one.

HINTS TO BUYERS

From information supplied by Sellers, but for which the Editors of THE REVIEW do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

Debenhams (Canada) Limited, Toronto.

This firm reports that for Spring their plain cloth ranges are the same as last season and at the same price, with the exception of drap superbe, which has gone up a penny a yard. Where a cheaper cloth is wanted they would draw buyers' attention to range R. 181. This is a French cloth of unusually good value. The range of colorings is somewhat more limited than drap superbe, but includes all the standard shades. British tweeds are shown in a large and varied selection. Prominent among them are the new elephant shades. This is a color the high class men's trade is taking up, and as the ladies' trade usually follows this lead, this color should be a coming one in ladies' lines.

In popular priced goods this firm is showing a great many ranges at prices lower than they have hitherto touched. In this connection special attention is drawn to a range of fine worsted suitings, for which there is such a marked feeling now in the trade. In serges the standard ranges of Atlantics are selling in increasing quantities. A new series at popular prices are S. G. 37, etc. This is a splendid cloth, in which large contracts have been placed. In this season's collection is included a range of cheviots in 25 shades. Three qualities of venetians are running for Fall, viz., C.H. 261, C.H. 301 and C.H. 341. Merchants' attention is drawn to the fact that C.H. 261, which last season had a slight admixture of cotton, is this season pure wool. This enables many shades to be included in the range, that it was impossible to show last year. Later on in the season a number of the very latest new colors will be added to those now shown.

Voile Duchesse is another popular cloth, in which an improved quality is offered at the old price, and which comes in a good collection of colors. Taffeta voiles are shown in two good numbers, C.H. 421 and C.H. 441. These are of French manufacture and come in a good range of colors. Plain eolienne, C.H. 581 and foule, C.H. 481, are splendid value at the price, and the color range is a big one.

In fancy dresses the strong feeling is for stripes and checks, but in more subdued effects than last season. The fashionable inclination is for dark and medium colors. Later an addition will be made to Debenham's range of fancies in the way of striped fabrics with a checked border. This promises, so Paris costumiers say, to be one of the novelties of the season.

Owing to the great success of mohairs, this firm is adding a mohair department, and the range carried will be an extensive one. Plain colored cloths promise to be big sellers, and many shades quite different to any ever attempted before in this cloth will be carried.

W. R. Brock & Company.

Department F.

Just before stocktaking a department containing so many lines has a number of broken ranges, odd assortments and lines of surplus stock to clear out at cut prices. The following are a few of the lines we have collected: 2 or 3 lines of men's waterproof coats; 2 lines of ladies' rainproof mantles; 100 cabinets of two-hole all-pearl buttons; 100 of four-hole; 50 gross of pin books, at 2c. per book; 100 doz. fine black wool mitts, No. H 97, to retail at 25c.; 300 men's rainproof coats, Oxford covert cloth, 33 1-3 per cent. below to-day's value; 3 lines of white Victoria lawns, remains of import orders of embroideries, in carton lots, choice stuff at special price to clear; 2 lines of 12-button length undressed kid gloves; a lot of travelers' samples at big discounts to clear out; one line of Saxony wool in boxes at prices that will fascinate any buyer; several lines of wool tams, in self and fancy colors at a big sacrifice; 500 doz. job. Swiss embroidered handkerchiefs, at $13.20 per gross, scarce goods in stock.

W. R. B. Co.'s gents' furnishing department are showing a very complete range of boys' and men's gloves and mitts, lined and unlined, for the sorting season. They draw attention to the following special values in this department: "Empire" unlined kid glove, in assorted tans, to retail at $1; "22" grey doeskin unlined glove, to retail at $1; "Royal" silk lined kid glove, to retail at $1.25; "Patriarch" silk lined kid glove, to retail at $1.50; "S 75" lined mocha glove, to retail at 75c; "S 76" lined mocha glove, to retail at $1; "B 204" lined kid glove, to retail at $1; "S 64" lined leather mitt, wool cuffs, to retail at 50c; "S 63" lined leather mitt, wool cuff, to retail at 50c; "S 65" lined leather mitt, wool cuff, to retail at 50c.

A special purchase of English ringwood gloves in boys' and men's, 20 per cent. less than regular prices.

Preparatory to stocktaking, they are offering broken ranges of men's underwear, top shirts and tweed pants, at special prices to clear.

A line of black taffeta silk skirts shown in Her Ladyship department, are very good value and although these goods are so high in price at present, this particular line is better value than has been shown for some time. Wide flounce, deep dust ruffle, selling for $3.75 each. It comes in black only.

A few lines of furs are being carried in stock in stoles, ties, ruffs and muffs, in marmot. These goods are all in good condition and merchants later on wanting immediate shipment will have their wants filled.

The new fold skirts are being shown in a number of styles, with folds of various widths. These goods are in great demand and now is the time to buy them, when they are new and salable.

Black sateen underskirts—E 319 and E 330 at $6.90 and $9 are again in stock and orders can have immediate filling.

The Perfection Cloth Measure.

Any help that tends to reduce the tedium and labor of taking stock, and that also gives an assurance of accuracy, should certainly find a place in every department where piece goods are carried. Such an article merchants will find the Perfection Cloth Measure. This measure will give accurately, without unwinding, the length of all kinds of fabrics wound in the piece. The piece of goods is taken into stock in a perfect condition, as the use of this measure not only saves the labor, but also the unsightly conditions that follow unwinding and rewinding. The measure will save its original cost many times over, as it not only enables piece goods to be taken into stock in half the time, but it is useful to check the accuracy of mill measurements, etc. Each measure is accurately correct, and plain directions for its use accompany each one. The Perfection Cloth Measure is sold by the W. R. Brock Co. and its price is $2.

Bastin, Merryfield & Co., Limited.

In referring to the specialties of Bastin, Merryfield & Cracknell, Ltd., last month, mention of the blouse section, which in point of fact is the premier department, was inadvertently omitted. The omission is partly due to the fact that until a few days ago the London manager of The Review had not met Miss Cracknell, directress of the company, and the brain of the blouse and costume departments. This lady is the designer and creator of all the charming models and goods produced in the ready-to-wear section of this house, and her knowledge of the requirements of the individual wearer is strongly reflected in the long line of samples thought out for home and export trade. They stand for individuality and distinction, there being no "knife work" whatever, among them.

This house appears to embrace all the characteristics of a Parisian establishment of the first category, priding itself on the fact that it possesses such a powerful combination of talent and good taste that at times the Parisian modelist is forestalled—surely a unique position for a London house in this line. This firm has for many years successfully designed and manufactured gowns, blouses and millinery of the highest class for New York establishments, so that its ability to cater for the Canadian trade is easily demonstrated. Mr. Bastin is still in Canada, making the acquaintance of Canadian customers through Mr. E. DeBoeck, who is in charge of the Canadian branch at 43 St. Sacrament St., Montreal.

Three-Piece Combination Garment, Shown by Sandersons, Ltd.

The Leona Garment.

The desire to present a slender appearance, which is the keynote of fashionable styles, is one reason given for the increasing sale of combination garments. Another reason is the increased comfort and also the fact that combination garments make the process of dressing a much quicker one. This is particularly applicable to the Leona garment, as this combination, which consists of corset cover, drawers, and skirt, is slipped on and fastened in a second or so. There is neither dart, pleat nor gather to mar the fit of the Leona, and yet it is so perfectly cut that it gives free use to every limb. So much is this the case that many of its wearers use it under their gymnasium suits when exercising.

The garment will at present be put on the market in four styles, to retail at $2.35, $3.50, $4.50 and $6. These are all cut the same, the difference being in fineness of material and elaboration of trimming.

The patent rights for Canada are controlled by Sandersons, Ltd. This firm, owing to increasing and extending business, are removing from their present factory to larger premises at 66 and 68 Wellington Street West.

Greenshields Western, Limited.

Greenshields Western report a number of stock-taking snaps in all departments. Stock-taking will commence shortly and broken lines are being sold now at a reduction, in order to facilitate operations. Some particularly good values are offered in flannelette blouses and skirts in tweeds, homespuns and plain cloths. In this department there is also on sale at tempting prices a special purchase of net waists for immediate delivery. Special attention is directed to a nice range of flannelette wrappers and night gowns for immediate sale. Values are surprising. The ladies' ready-to-wear department also offers a special line of petticoats made of German flannelette skirting and extra heavy weight, to retail at 75 cents each.

Dressed dolls are a specialty this year with Greenshields Western for Christmas trade. They are offering some particularly fine assortments of 25s., 50s. and 75s., costing from 25 cents to $10 each.

In pearl buttons they are offering a special snap. They are selling a cabinet with 100 dozen pearl buttons in assorted sizes for $3.60. The buttons are two and four-holed, and at this price are special value.

Travelers are now on the road with samples of Spring goods. In all lines they are showing a better assortment than ever before. There has been a general advance in nearly all lines of dry goods, but Greenshields Western announce that they bought a big part of their stock well in advance of the rise and therefore they are able to offer particularly good values.

In ladies' ready-to-wear goods Greenshields Western are carrying more high-grade lines than ever before. They are offering special values in wash skirts, piques, ducks and crash goods. There are also some particularly attractive offerings in children's pinafores, dresses, wash blouses and similar lines.

In hosiery Greenshields Western have some strong leaders for Spring trade. An extensive range of lisle hose was bought before the advance in price, and, accordingly, Greenshields Western are able to offer the trade some particularly good values in this line. It consists of embroidered and lace-work goods and is very extensive. In cashmere hose Greenshields Western are able to sell at only a slight advance over the prices charged last year. Their goods were bought right.

Greenshields, Limited, Montreal.

The various departments of Greenshields Limited, Montreal, are showing great activity. Orders are large and travelers report fairly satisfactory conditions throughout the Dominion. Further, they are enthusiastic over their line display of samples.

Greenshields ready-to-wear department reports trade in a healthy condition. This is strongly vermed by the increased business of the previous season. Ladies' and children's white wear, children's ready-to-wear garments, ladies' and misses' dress skirts are decidedly stronger than any previous season. The tendency, taken all around, is for higher class garments. Greenshields fully anticipate early and complete deliveries in all lines. They would strongly advise all merchants to place orders early in order to procure best possible prices and early deliveries, as the market at the present writing, on all fabrics, shows no tendency to decrease in price. As a result, everything points to higher prices on all repeats. The most important feature at the moment that should interest all retailers, is to get early deliveries, which mean to them a much longer season when starting out with a complete showing of these goods. This in itself is the best advertising a merchant can get.

In the knitted goods department there is great activity and some fear is expressed that there will be a shortage. At the moment they report a large business in Fall and Winter hosiery. They advise merchants to look into their stock of plain and ribbed cashmere hosiery, as after present contracts expire there is sure to be a big difference in the qualities at popular prices. Further, this firm call the attention of customers to their "Square Knit" brand, which they have entire control of. This firm have a fine range of balbriggan and natural wool hosiery which they are now showing to the trade. In these lines, especially, Greenshields find the demand for the better grade goods much larger than in previous seasons. The merchant who pays a little more for his goods insures his customers general satisfaction. In imported lines they are showing a particularly good range of embroidered goods, allover lace and lace ankle effects, besides plain silk, lisles, brilliant lisles and mercerized lisles. Another popular line which is meeting with popular favor is a lisle hose with ingrain heels and toe. This last-mentioned line is popular in all the markets of the world. As regards the color question this firm anticipate quite a demand for tans, also light evening shades, with white ruling.

L. Hirshson & Co.

L. Hirshson & Co., Montreal, state that greater care than ever has been exercised in the buying of their Spring stock for 1908. Prompt shipments are assured and everything possible to make business run smoothly and profitably to their customers has been done. In their warehouse you may expect to see all the latest things, in general dry goods.

They make special mention of some lines they are showing in Japanese fancy goods, direct from Japan, from handkerchiefs to gowns and plain and fancy silks. Further, an entirely new stock of Irish goods, table covers and cloths, tabling and napkins to match, towels and towelings, men's negligee and dress shirts, etc., are in stock. Special attention is also drawn to the line of collars handled by this firm.

Handkerchiefs in all qualities and materials, such as cotton, lawn, brocade and silk, plain stitched, hemstitched and embroidered, with emblems, mottoes and initials are now being shown by travelers on the road. Curtains, nets, laces, insertions and all-overs, etc. All this firm's other lines will be stocked as usual.

L. Hirshson & Co. are showing a large assortment of hosiery for men, women and children in cotton, worsted, wool lisle, and silk.

A New Glove Factory.

The Robert Ryan Company, Three Rivers, P.Q., is the style of a "new-in-name-only" glove firm, as the proprietor, Robert Ryan, has had an extensive experience in the glove trade, having been identified with the Balcer Glove Co. of the same city for 12 years. Although the new firm has been established less than a year everything is in smooth working order and the size of orders evidences the confidence in the new concern.

The plant owned by the firm is 42x36, three storeys, and preparations are under way for an addition in the Spring, 75x36, three storeys. A strong feature of this business is the systematic arrangement of every detail of manufacture and office equipment as well. Every process is closely watched, from the grading of skins until the last stitch is sewn. Quality in every sense of the word is the watchword and deliveries will be made according to sample. Expert glove cutters and skilful machine operators are employed. The range manufactured by this firm comprises over 300 numbers, consisting of lined and unlined gloves for ladies, men, boys, misses and children. The Maple Leaf, Canada, trade-mark is a standard they intend to live up to. Every glove want can be met by this firm. The lines are handled by representative jobbers.

Mechanical Santa Claus.

J. R. Palmenberg's, Sons, 710 Broadway, N.Y., will mail you, on application, an interesting description of their mechanical Santa Claus. This automaton is said to be the nearest approach to the human being, in action and aspect, ever perfected. Write, then, for particulars about this remarkable holiday attraction for window or department.

Stock-Taking Snaps

Stock-taking period will soon be here, and we have made telling reductions in many lines to insure a double quick sale. In our we have a few lines of Fall and Winter Blouses which we are able to offer at 25 per cent. less than the regular value. Also a special line of skirts, (our No. 992) made up in tweeds and plain cheviots on which you can make a handsome profit by selling at $2.50 to $3.00. Regularly these skirts would bring $4.00 and $4.50.

Men's Furnishing Department

We are clearing out a number of heavy winter lines such as Sweaters, Underwear, Lumbermen's Socks, Mitts and Gloves, Wool Socks, Mackinaw Coats, etc., etc., at from 10 to 25 per cent. less than regular prices.

The Negative and Positive of Buying and Selling

We are not asking you to buy goods that are out of season, old, shopworn, low priced because they are unseasonable, soiled, damaged or goods that are dear at any price owing to their existence in your stock deteriorating its entire value.

The goods we want to sell are positively in demand; new, fashionable, up-to-date in every particular, goods that people are buying and are thinking of buying to prepare themselves and their families for the Fall and Winter Seasons. Goods that will sell without having to use a vocabulary of words wasting your time, energy and self-respect.

One of the adages or maxims of successful business is "Do as large a business on as small a stock as you possibly can." Unsaleable goods eat up interest, and often deprive one of their cash discounts. A well assorted stock of goods, that people are asking for, of the best possible value, brings more customers, profit and dignity to your store or warehouse than any conglomeration of goods that are supposed to be bargains.

We respectfully invite you to inspect our stock of General Dry Goods, Carpets, House Furnishings, Men's Furnishings and Woollens.

"Truth is stranger than Fiction," and will wear throughout eternity. We have been in business in the City of Toronto since September 27, 1849. We are still in business and will remain in business as long as we can do business honestly, honorably and profitably.

Time to Make Every Dollar Count

WHEN business is rushing, and money is made easily, the temptation with the most careful business men is to be indifferent to the small economies.

But if trade is going to tighten up some this Fall it's well to watch every leak and make every dollar count.

We can save the Dry Goods Merchant and Milliner many dollars by re-dyeing and finishing off-color and faded fabrics, plumes and feathers.

—Leading Merchants in all parts of Canada are our customers.

Spring Hosiery

Our range of hosiery for Spring, 1908, is complete in every detail and is undoubtedly the finest collection we have ever shown. Prices are right, too. The latest patterns are here in lace ankle, allover lace, lisle, cotton, silk and silk-embroidered, lisle in black, white, greys and tans.

Embroideries

We also show a comprehensive range of embroideries in edgings, insertions, strappings, allovers and flounces—the best values we have ever offered. A strong feature is our box lots of edgings, baby sets, etc., from six ends to twelve ends per box.

Laces

A splendid assortment is yours to choose from in valenciennes and fancy laces.

It will repay you to examine our samples before placing your orders.

Staple Cottons at Old Prices

Although the mills show advances from ten to fifty per cent. on cotton goods within the last twelve months, we are yet in a position to quote most staple lines at old prices.

At present we have a magnificent assortment of patterns, but the spring business so far received tells us that our full range will not last long. We would therefore strongly advise the trade to place their orders for all cotton goods at once. Prices at the mills maintain their high level and all repeats to the mills will be accepted only at the present high prices.

Ginghams, Etc., at Old Prices

Our representatives are carrying an enormous range of Scotch and Canadian Ginghams, Shirtings, Flannelettes, etc., at old prices; also 1,500 pieces Job Gingham at twenty per cent. less than present prices, and 3,000 pieces Bleached Cotton at less than mill prices.

Why?

Why is the BUSY MAN'S MAGAZINE the best publication in the magazine field?

Simply because each issue contains, in addition to its original articles, the Cream and the Choicest and Best articles appearing in all other magazines and periodicals.

Take your favorite magazine, pick out the articles that interest you, then turn to the Busy Man's and you will find that these same articles appear in it.

Not only do the best articles in your favorite magazine appear in Busy Man's, but the live, up-to-date ones appearing in SCORES of publications which do not come your way.

Think of how interesting, entertaining, and instructive this many-in-one magazine must be. Not a dull page in it; every page SELECT.

It is so interesting that not one per cent. of our thousands of readers discontinue their subscriptions. A post card giving us your address will bring you the unsolicited testimony of dozens of our readers.

We will send the Magazine till January 1st, 1909 (14 issues) for $2, the price of one year's subscription. This offer only holds good while the Christmas Number lasts.

PARCEL CARRIER PAYS FOR ITSELF.

For more than a quarter of a century the firm of D. McMillan & Company has been identified with the business life of Petrolia. The present head of the business, D. McMillan, has conducted it for twenty-one years, and for five years prior to that time, another member of the family was in charge.

The firm handles general dry goods, furs, men's furnishings and clothing, the two latter departments being located in a separate portion of the store. The building now occupied was erected by the present head of the firm several years ago, and is well adapted to the requirements of the business.

Five years ago a parcel carrier system was installed, and Mr. McMillan is authority for the statement that it paid for itself the first year. Following the installation of this system it was found that, inadvertently, of course, the clerks made many errors in measurement and in counting, and a peculiar feature of this situation was the fact that in the great majority of cases the errors were in favor of the customer.

The parcel carrier system, by which all the goods are remeasured and checked at the parcel office, detected these errors, and from information gained from reports of the clerk in charge of the parcel desk, Mr. McMillan based his statement that the system had paid for itself the first year.

The firm does a moderate credit business, but special care is exercised in opening accounts, and the aggregate amount on the books at one time would not exceed $500.

The district surrounding Petrolia, which is one of the oldest sections of the province, resembles, in many respects, the newer portions, an extensive migration having taken place during recent years from the more northerly counties, and, as a consequence, agriculture has developed in a section in which that industry is of comparatively recent origin. The farmers, as a rule, are prosperous and enterprising, and the market town of Petrolia affords an easy outlet for their produce, for which good prices are paid.

Mr. McMillan reaches the residents of the town and county with his business announcements through the medium of the local press. His advertisements describe the goods and quote prices.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATIONS.

Geddes Brothers have had twenty-six birthdays since they commenced business in Strathroy, and each birthday is celebrated by the firm, various forms being given to these celebrations, which are times of merry-making, rather than direct appeals for business.

On a recent birthday a concert was given in the store which was thrown open during the evening, and an orchestra furnished music, in addition to which there were other concert features of interest.

Two stores are conducted by this firm, one each in Strathroy and Sarnia. In the departments carried they are practically duplicates, general dry goods, millinery, mantles, ladies' ready-to-wear, furs, staples, carpets and house furnishings, men's furnishings and clothing being the general divisions of the stock.

A new store front has recently been installed and greatly improves the appearance of the Strathroy store premises, affording greatly improved facilities for window display. Entrances are placed at either side of the store, the centre portion of the windows thus being available for the displays.

Two-thirds of the ground floor, and the entire two upper floors are utilized by the firm, millinery, mantles and ladies' ready-to-wear being placed on the first floor, above the main store.

A staff of thirty is employed in sales and dressmaking departments.

Each department is placed in charge of a salesman, who is held responsible for its success, and clerks confine their attention to their particular departments, except on rare occasions, when they are transferred to assist in a rush.

Wm. Geddes has charge of the Strathroy store, while that in Sarnia is presided over by J. R. Geddes.

PETROLIA AND THE OIL INDUSTRY.

The R. Stirrett Company has been in business in Petrolia for fourteen years, and that period has been one of progress. The firm, of which R. Stirrett is the presiding head, occupies a store with a commanding front on the principal business street of the town, 110 x 60 feet, in which a good general stock is carried. Dry goods, millinery, carpets and house furnishings occupy a prominent place in the store, and special attention is given these departments, with the result that a good trade has been developed.

In a separate building manufacturing is carried on, the products comprising whitewear, children's goods and men's trousers.

In the sales staff and manufacturing department thirty-five persons are employed, and in addition to the Petrolia store the firm has been conducting a general business at Hagersville, where a $10,000 stock is carried.

Mr. Stirrett is a heavy advertiser, using space not only in the Petrolia papers, but in those published at Forest, Wyoming, Brigden and Oil Springs as well. The trade of the agricultural community is an important factor in the business of the Petrolia stores, and Mr. Stirrett uses the newspapers in the surrounding towns for the purpose of securing his share of it.

The store is equipped with a modern parcel carrier system, all the goods being remeasured and checked at the parcel office.

General trade conditions in Petrolia depend largely upon the oil industry, the feature of which is its speculative nature, and, as a consequence, Petrolia's business life has been characterized by a series of inflations and depressions. It is anticipated, however, that with the development of the agricultural industry a more stable condition will be secured.

Mr. Stirrett reports that business conditions and prospects, so far as his firm is concerned, are satisfactory, and he has been buying heavily to keep his $40,000 stock up to normal.

The selling space available in the present building is fully occupied, and Mr. Stirrett is negotiating for an adjoining building, which he expects to secure in time to facilitate the Christmas business, which promises to be fully up to the volume of last year.

For five years this store has used trading stamps, taking over the Petrolia business of the Lynch Trading Company, when the latter concern went out of business. The coupons issued by this company were redeemed by the Stirrett Company and a suit was entered to recover the amount from the Trading Company, and won. Mr. Stirrett stated to The Review that he was satisfied with this feature of his campaign for business, his continuance of it for five years being proof of this fact.

BRASS BAND AT OPENING.

McKenzie & Martin, of Vernon, B.C., have recently opened a men's furnishing department, adding it to a grocery stock which they formerly carried. They moved into new premises, which are the largest in the city, and on the occasion of the opening of "The Big New Store" which they call it, had a brass band and a formal opening. In Vernon no stores are open in the evenings, except Saturday and on the opening night no goods were sold.

The credit system is in vogue in that city, and McKenzie & Martin characterize it as a great nuisance. They believe in the cash principle, and although conditions are such that they cannot adopt it, they watch their credits closely and state that they have been fortunate, but that they have had some losses.

Vernon is in the fruit district of British Columbia and in a section which is being settled rapidly.

WESTERN STORE'S GOOD RECORD

An aggregate year's business of $175,000 in three stores owned by the Imperial Trading Company in Moose Jaw, Sask., and Medicine Hat and Calgary, Alta., is the record made by W. J. Binning, who is the directing head of the company named. In the three stores general and fancy dry goods, carpets and furs are handled and modern business methods are employed. A recent issue of the Moose Jaw Times contained views of the company's store in that city, which would do credit to a city of much greater pretensions than Moose Jaw.

CASH SYSTEM IN COUNTRY STORE

Robertson Brothers, Company, of Dunchurch, Ont., introduced the cash system into their general store last Spring, and report that the results have fully justified the course taken, the volume of business increasing to a satisfactory extent, following the inauguration of the system. W. M. Robertson, the manager of the store, states that one of the advantages of the cash business is the fact that it discourages the purchase of goods for which there is an inability to pay.

"WEDNESDAY WINNERS" WEEKLY SALE.

"Wednesday winners," specially priced items for the mid-week market day, are being advertised by Richard Hall & Son, Peterborough, as a means of stimulating trade for that day, and it is reported that the results have fully justified the adoption of the plan. The practice is to cover the city thoroughly with bills on Monday, giving prices and descriptions of the offerings for Wednesday, and on Tuesday the daily newspapers carry three-quarter page advertisements, giving the same information. This plan has been in operation for several months, and it is stated that each week the volume of business attributable to this method shows a gratifying increase.

TWO NEW DEPARTMENTS.

Subsequent to the enlargement of his dry goods store in Peterborough, A. W. Cressman added two new departments, shoes and stationery. Men's shoes are, of course, placed in the portion of the store devoted to men's wear, while those for ladies are sold on the second floor. The stationery department occupies a considerable space on the main floor. This is the first Peterborough store in which these departments have been opened, and their introduction is reported to have been followed by satisfactory results.

A REPRESENTATIVE STORE.

Mihell, Gill & Mihell, of Strathroy, are among the oldest business firms of the town, and conduct a general store, in which dry goods, millinery, men's clothing and furnishings and house furnishings occupy a prominent and important place, one half of the ground floor space, and the first floor being devoted to these departments. The firm report business conditions satisfactory and prospects for the future good, buying for Spring being on a basis indicative of the belief that the record of last season will be equaled, if not surpassed. A dressmaking department is maintained, a staff working outside the store being employed.

BRITISH EXPORTS STILL GROWING.

The most conspicuous feature in British trade statistics is the continued growth of the exports, the increase for September being $22,537,574, or 15.17 per cent.

The imports, on the other hand, have gained only $1,126,308, or 0.62 per cent. Among the exports the improvement was mainly in manufactured articles, which increased $15,704,195, including cotton goods, $3,780,823; woollen goods, $1,648,274; new ships, $3,448,256; machinery, $2,261,414; iron and steel, $1,852,949, and electrical goods and apparatus etc., $751,709. The increase in raw materials amounted to $5,904,067, made up principally of the exports of coal and coke, which were larger by $5,281,277. Great Britain exported 5,674,718 tons of coal, valued at $18,449,586, against 4,843,491 tons, valued at $13,068,309 in the corresponding month of last year. In food, drink, and tobacco the increase is only $915,943.

The net gain in the imports is trifling, as was the case for August, and this is owing principally to the reduction in various manufactured articles, notably woollen goods. Among raw materials wood and timber declined $1,477,284; metallic ores, other than iron and steel, $1,122,336, and hides and undressed skins, $1,117,923, while cotton increased $1,584,571, and oil seeds, nuts, fats, and gums, $1,156,694. Food, drink, and tobacco show a net improvement of $1,663,087. Receipts of wheat from Canada, Australia, Argentina, and Turkey were larger, while those from Russia, Roumania, the United States and the British East Indies declined. Less wheat, meal and flour came forward from the United States, Canada and Australia. With respect to corn, more of that cereal was imported from Russia, Roumania, the United States and Canada, but a smaller quantity from Argentina.

For the nine months ending September, the imports have increased 7.25 per cent., or to $2,312,292,354, and the exports 14.82 per cent., or to $1,553,781,785.

Good Advertising

How to Produce It

Brief Talks Given Monthly
By T. J. Tobin

Advertising is the department of his business which the average drygoodsman knows least about.

It is undoubtedly a very important department, and, therefore, one to the study of which he should apply himself diligently.

There are no stupendously intricate problems to be solved. As a matter of fact, effective advertising is mainly the product of common sense principles used in conjunction with knowledge of the goods to be sold.

Every successful merchant possesses both of these requisites. Comparatively few seem to recognize their full relation to the matter of good publicity.

In the first place you must have confidence in the selling power of advertising, and you must believe in the merchandise which you wish to dispose of.

When you have grasped the fact that the best advertising ever published was nothing more or less than printed salesmanship of a high order, you are on the right track.

It is not sufficient that you contract for so much space and put in it a list of lines which you carry, with your name at the bottom in prominent type. That sort of publicity won't sell goods.

Very likely you consider yourself a good salesman. If you hadn't considerable ability in this direction it is not likely that you would be at the head of a business today. Model your methods of selling goods through newspaper space after those which you employ in making sales over your counter.

Give the people the information that they would naturally look for—and which you would just as naturally give—if they went into your store to buy. Why don't you do this now? Simply because you have not brought your common sense to bear on the matter.

If you speak interestingly, descriptively and informingly of the merchandise in your store I'll guarantee that your advertising will pay you well.

Be honest. Aim to get the confidence of your public. Be straightforward. Avoid exaggeration.

If you are putting on a special sale, state the reason for it briefly and plainly. The people will appreciate that policy, and when they come to rely on what you say through your ads. you will have established a very valuable asset. It can be done.

You may not know the first thing about type and typography. Don't worry about that. You can tell when an ad. looks well. Insist upon good work and your printer will give it to you. Consult with him as to the lay-out of your space, and he will be very glad to advise you as to the writing of copy so that he may get the best results from it.

With a great many merchants the writing of ads. is something to be attended to in spare moments. A jumble of items on sheets of wrapping paper—often of assorted sizes—is delivered to the printer, and he is expected to whip it into shape. That's not a square deal. Without good copy the best printer on earth is at a big disadvantage.

The Review will be glad to help you, at any time, to a better knowledge of good advertising principles and practice.

McCurdy & Co., Sydney, C.B., are liberal advertisers, and their space is generally filled with matter that has good selling quality. I have before me a full-page ad. which is well laid out, well illustrated, and which contains some pretty fair descriptive paragraphs. It would be more effective if the prices were brought out in black type, though not too prominently. The introduction is of the right length and has a moderate and reasonable tone.

I have reproduced an ad. run during October by Hodgens Bros., Goderich. It is a splendid one for its purpose. The style is sufficiently unique to attract special attention, the introduction contains all necessary information in concise form, and in each paragraph below a particular line of goods is spoken of interestingly. Space did not permit of a great deal of descriptive matter.

Some good firms that I know of occasionally devote their space almost exclusively to a particular line upon which they are strong. I believe this policy is a good one. It is well exemplified by the ad. of Henry Young & Co., Victoria, B.C. All ladies buy waists, and if the firm can engage their keen interest in these goods it is likely to get more of them into the store than if it excited only a moderate interest in a variety of lines.

Will J. Whelan, men's furnisher, Quebec, issued a splendid little folder dealing with the subject of "Whelan's Collars." The matter is so good that I am reproducing the greater portion of it :

Want to try an experiment ?

Take off your coat and vest and look into a mirror.

Nothing immodest about it is there—nothing undressed.?

Now put on the coat and vest, but leave off the collar—and look again.

See the point ?

Before you tried you wouldn't have said the collar had more to do with your looks than the coat and vest, would you ?

What do you say now ?

And then, too, there are collars and collars.

Ever notice the difference ?

Look at the next ten men you meet, and you will.

The man wearing a fresh, well-fitting collar and a cheap suit looks better dressed then he of expensive clothes and ill-fitting or wilted collar.

By the time you have read this far you realize.

First, the importance of the collar itself.

Second, the importance of its fit and shape.

I sell collars.

Collars that are collars.

And the collars I sell fit.

They are not made on theory. Each pattern before it is approved is made up, tried on and worn.

Every design is original and smart.

And there are nearly two hundred of them—all different.

The Hudson's Bay Stores, Fort William, carry a large variety of lines, yet only a fair-sized space is used, and it is very often devoted to ads. of one subject. Out of six that I have on my desk, the first deals with corsets, the second with dress goods, the third with raincoats and umbrellas, the fourth with tapestry art squares, the fifth with skirts, collars, belts, toques, men's shirts, curtain ends, brass extension rods and curtain poles, and the sixth with both dry goods and groceries. The copy is bright, interesting and impressive. When I receive more of this store's ads., I hope to reproduce one of them.

Last month the W. H. Scroggie Co., Montreal, held a special men's collar sale, which was advertised as follows :

"To-morrow morning we inaugurate the biggest sale of men's collars ever held in Montreal. Thousands of collars—all heights and sizes, including stand-ups, wings, stand-up-turn-down collars, easy-to-button collars, etc. These collars are not "seconds." All first-class four-ply Austrian linen; sold regularly at $2 per box. We put them on sale Friday and Saturday at an extraordinarily low price—a price per box of one dozen. Remember these are only sold by the box at 69c."

An investigation of these values as shown in their window display and department proved that the majority of the collars were a special patented brand, known first as Kelly's Patent, and later as Nick Collar. They are notched at either side of the opening, and are featured in stand-ups and wings. Very few of these goods were of Austrian lines, and the lot was unquestionably made up, outside of the Nick Collar, of clearings from the wholesaler. This was decidedly poor policy on the part of the Scroggie Co. They told the truth, but certainly not the whole truth. As a result many people were, doubtless, misled.

Interesting Extracts and Ideas

"We try to make our store news interesting reading from day to day. We try to make it helpful and instructive—helpful from the point of true economy, and instructive because of our progressive methods."—Madill Bros., Napanee, "The Daylight Store,"

"Ten pairs only of heavy wool blankets, large size, well napped, scoured and clean, fancy pink borders. * * * White Holland window shades, best quality of cloth and roller standard size, some trimmed with rather wavy lace and insertion, others with silk lace."—Richard Hall & Son, Peterboro.

"On Friday last one of our regular customers, who is located 160 miles west of here, drove in for his Winter supply of goods. This morning we loaded up another man, who came in 120 miles, and took out $320 worth of supplies for himself and his neighbors. He had never dealt with us before, but had heard of the Cairns reputation for right goods and right prices There's a reason for these trips. These men aren't taking pleasure jaunts across the country with ox teams and working horses. It means that the stock is here ; that prices are right twelve months in every year ; that we play fair with our customers. When we offer specials they're not simply goods marked up and then marked down again. They are genuine money-saving specials which cannot be matched elsewhere. We guarantee every purchase and every price."—J. F. Cairns, Saskatoon.

"Fashionable long-neck scarfs in wide assortments.—Beautiful long silk and lace scarfs are here in a large variety of charming and distinguished styles. Long Spanish silk lace scarfs, new Brussels applique lace scarfs, pretty crepe de chene scarfs, black, white, plain, colors and exquisite Dresden and stripe effects."—Thos. C. Watkins, Hamilton.

"Men's full-sized solid steel ribbed unbrellas, with fine silk and linen covering, self-opening attachment, with invisible spring, with plain or fancy carved handles, outside pull-over of solid silk."—T, Lindsay, Ltd., Ottawa.

"Hello ! Mrs. Housekeeper ! This is your time. Starting to-morrow we will hold a sale of the household necessities which you are most interested in, at prices which are most agreeable. Take inventory of your linen supply. Cast an eye over your carpets and rugs. Look to your curtains and draperies."—John White Co., Woodstock.

"Fine, fleecy, chill-repelling woolen blankets ; splendid qualities, in cotton blankets ; finely made, comfortables, filled with pure white carded cotton or excellent quality down."

"When Scroggie's, noted for their strict adherence to the truth in advertising, say that this sale is extraordinary in the extreme, depend upon it the statement is true."—W. H. Scroggie, Ltd., Montreal.

"The public confidence is a great asset for any store. How near the Right House comes to commanding the confidence of the people of Hamilton and vicinity is best shown by the enormous increase in our business of late. * * * Fair dealing, honest methods, splendid values, unfailing reliability and good service for upwards of 75 years are reaping their reward—the entire confidence of the public. * * * It is an enviable reputation, one which we are striving with every energy to further enhance."—Thos. C. Watkins, Hamilton.

"Beautiful Louisines.—Rich, mellow weaves, with an exquisite finish ; good, dependable qualities ; tan, medium and dark brown, grey, slate, marine, navy, sky, turquoise, old rose, pink, coral, cadet, castor, crimson, reseda, myrtle and helio."

Post Office Mismanagement

Toronto Grand Jury Criticizes Policy of Department—Staffs are Inadequate and Underpaid—Consequent Annoyance and Loss to Business Men.

A grand jury in Toronto, recently in its presentment to Judge Winchester, referred to the policy of parsimony characterizing the administration of the Post Office Department. The clause in which this criticism is given reads:

> In the matter of the theft of letters from the post office in which one young man was found guilty and sentenced to three years in the Kingston Penitentiary we are compelled to call public attention to the small salaries that these clerks receive. It was shown in evidence that this man was married. His hours were long, his responsibilities important and his salary nine dollars per week. We mention this, making no excuse for the criminal, but we are fully persuaded that the conditions are such that in the end the public service will be filled with incompetent and unambitious men, and the present intention to save money will, in the long run, end disastrously for the service."

The Post Office Department is Canada's biggest business organization, surpassing in magnitude the operations of even the Canadian Pacific Railway. In view of its size, and its importance to the people of Canada, it would seem to be but good business judgment to place at its head a man trained for the position, and thoroughly competent.

In every city of the Dominion complaints are made at the inadequacy of the postal service ; business is hampered and annoyance is caused by reason of the fact that the department is not properly organized, and that there is no one at its head who has sufficient grasp of the situation to place it on an efficient basis. An instance, illustrating the general character of the service, is reported in the Victoria, B.C., Colonist, which says:

> "The post office staff is working energetically to cope with the receipt of mail at the local post office, but the staff of sorters is all too inadequate to prevent the accumulation and delay, especially of the second class mails. Efforts are made to give as early a distribution as possible of letters, but the newspaper mail is delayed daily. Often newspapers lie for a day on the floor of the post office unsorted. Yesterday much of the newspaper mail received by the steamer Charmer at 7 a.m. was still unsorted at 5 p.m.
> "The delay is entirely due to the utter inadequacy of the staff. The situation has existed for some time and attention has been drawn to the poor service as a result. Officials of the post office, however, have been unable to secure permission for the necessary increase of the staff, and the staff has struggled short-handed to cope with the accumulating piles of newspaper mail. Often the day staff leave the accumulated mails for the night staff and in the morning when the day staff return to work there is still a large pile to which further additions are made as the incoming mails are brought in."

Similar conditions prevail in the majority of city offices in the Dominion, this case being cited merely to indicate the general inefficiency of the service.

Hon. Mr. Lemieux, the new Postmaster-General, has done considerable to improve the situation, but the seat of the trouble is in the incompetence in the administrative officers of the department. It should be adopted as a rule of the service that appointments of promotion are to be given to men who have proven that they have the capacity to fill them satisfactorily.

The Principle of Exchange

The Credit System and Its Application to the Retail Business — Importance of the Exercise of Tact in Salesmanship—Store Problems.

BY HOWARD R. WELLINGTON

It is to credit alone that we are indebted for that intermediate agent which plays so important a part in the transaction of business, whether it be in causing supply and demand to meet, or in applying to the industry of exchange the principle of the division of labor, which is so necessary to production. Without credit this intermediary is impossible in most instances. By facilitating exchange it accelerates and increases it, encouraging both industry and trade. Strictly speaking, the largest share of the business of the world is done on a credit basis, and how could it be otherwise? The merchant starts in business with possibly only two or three thousand dollars capital, expecting to turn over ten to twelve thousand a year. According to this he would have to turn over his capital five or six times a year and were it not for the credit extended him it would be impossible to continue in business. In many instances the instruments of payment which we call cash are in reality only promises to pay.

During the Middle Ages credit transactions of great importance and on long time were effected without having the slightest trace in writing, and even to this day the Russian producers and merchants who frequent certain great fairs, contract credit obligations for twelve months' time, without giving the least evidence of debt, and for a very good reason, perhaps, for frequently they can neither read nor write.

When we give credit, we give value and wait for the value we are to receive in return; but we often cannot afford to do this, so we get some other person to wait for us by giving him an instrument of credit which we take when we deliver our goods, or later. The person to whom we give this instrument of credit may not be able to wait either, as will very likely be the case at a time when the money market is tight, so he takes the paper to the bank and discounts it. It is the business of the bank to wait, not the business of the merchant. The latter should keep his full capital active every day, and every dollar he is waiting for is inactive and is earning nothing. On the other hand, the bank increases its capital by waiting, for the simple reason that it charges for the accommodation, just as a lawyer charges for giving his time to his client.

But does this increased circulation increase capital? The machine runs faster and turns out more work, but does not increase its size, or its intrinsic value; it is the work that counts, not the machine. The system affords an opportunity for a greater volume of business from the same capital.

History of Exchange.

In early times foreign trade consisted in the direct exchange of commodities. A caravan would set out with a variety of manufactured articles across some desert, and come back with ivory, spices and other valuable raw products, obtained by barter. Or we need not go farther than our own country, where the North American Indians bartered or traded in similar manner, for an illustration. In later times the merchant loaded his own ship and sent her forth on an expedition, trusting that the master would sell the cargo to advantage and with the proceeds bring back another cargo to be sold at a good profit in the home market. Trade was thus reciprocal and what was sent out paid for what was brought back.

Wherever this direct reciprocal exchange did not exist, it was necessary to devise some mode of transferring debts. To the early Italian and Jewish merchants we owe the development of the use of the credit instruments which have since developed into bills of exchange. As early as the fourteenth century bills were used under similar conditions and of about the same form as those of the present day.

Treatment of the Customers From Out of Town.

Just a word or two along this line may prove helpful. One of the most important things for the inside man to remember is the old maxim, "common courtesy is the first rule of business." It requires a great deal of tact and ingenuity to know exactly how to treat a customer who comes into your store taking it for granted that everyone in the establishment knows who he is, whether this is his first call or not. In such a case it is far better policy not to ask the customer outright his name and address, but the desired information can be obtained in such a way during the course of conversation as not to offend him, and without giving him the impression that he was unknown. Make your customer feel that his call is greatly appreciated and whether his order is small or large, the same attention will be observed in every detail.

Careless, indifferent clerks can do more to drive away business by not observing these courtesies than all the effort made by a progressive and up-to-date sales department to build up. Cultivate a memory for faces and names. A customer appreciates the friendly greeting and it goes a long way toward securing an order, to be in a position to call such a patron by name. Appear interested in his business, ask him how he finds trade, what he thinks of the present outlook; these may seem small matters, but try it and see the result.

Of course there are exceptional men who would take offence at what appears to them undue familiarity; a very amusing instance was told by a traveler a few days ago, which illustrates this "exceptional" storekeeper: A certain dealer was approached in a very friendly manner and a hand extended in a free-and-easy way, but to the amazement of the traveling man, this approach to friendliness was ignored, and the traveler severely censured for his undue familiarity upon this, his first appearance in the store. Naturally the traveler was somewhat annoyed and asking for an explanation was told that it was not customary in his (the merchant's) district for travelers on their first calls to shake hands with the dealer, intimating that the latter might be led to believe that he had done business before with the firm represented, whereas this might not be the case.

The same exercise of tact which is essential to the success of the traveling salesman must characterize the store clerk if he is to attain to the highest success.

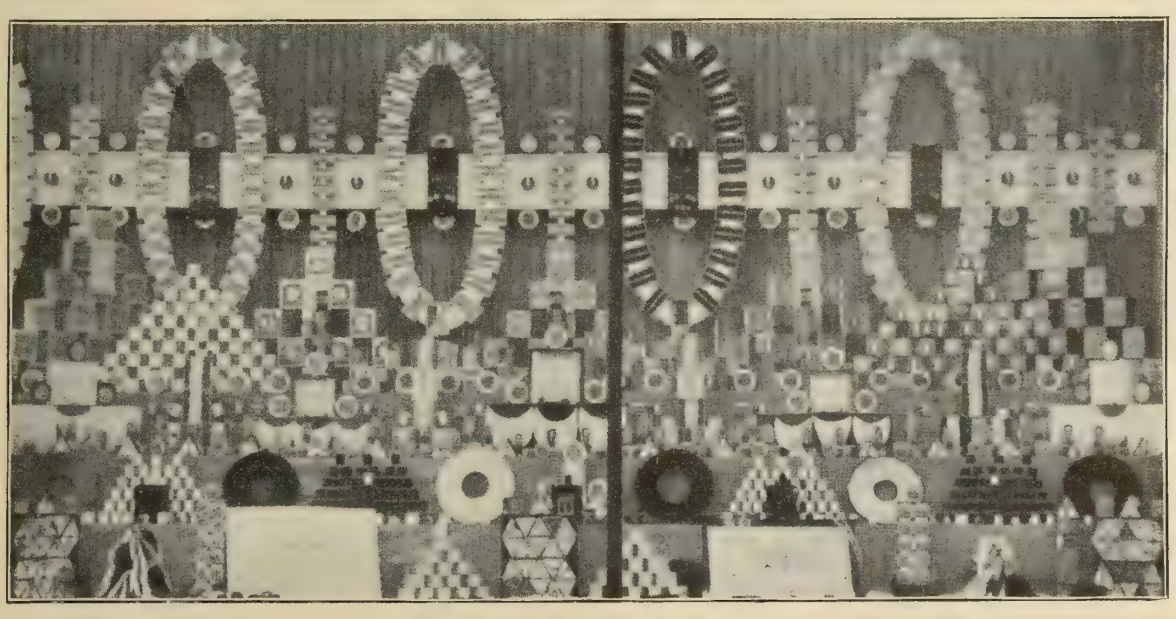
WINDOW DRESSING

THE ART OF DISPLAY

INTERIOR DECORATION

Make an Appropriation

Fixtures and Trimmers' Supplies a Necessary Investment—Yearly Appropriations should be Made.



About the hardest task the window trimmer has in some stores, is that of getting from the firm, the money for needful fixtures and materials. And yet, the firm expects the store windows to be selling propositions.

The work of making them such is, under these conditions, a hard task, since of necessity they must lack the much desired element of novelty and individuality. These are the features of a display that make the buying public take a look into store windows, "because," as they tell their friends, "there is always something new to be seen there."

ing and twisting old trimmings and fixtures, it is going to take him longer to put in a trim. Therefore, in addition to the fact that the completed work is but second-rate, the windows are of necessity dark, for many hours when they would otherwise be in use. Then many lines cannot be shown at all, or, at the best, are only imperfectly shown, because, the proper fixtures are not available.

When valuable time is wasted, and goods cannot, through lack of fixtures, have the benefit of a window display; when only two trims are put in, where three could be; and when windows are a blank longer than is necessary, where does economy come in? Where do you make a saving? No saving is made, but a very material and distinct loss, that is putting the whole store at a disadvantage.

New fixtures from time to time, and new materials for Christmas Notion Window.

Yet all merchants know—or say they know—the great value of good attractive windows; not windows full of freak decorations, but good, sensibly dressed, trade-pulling windows.

The trimmer, who is working for a firm of this kind, is laboring under a great disadvantage. Not only will his work be heavier, for he will have to spend much valuable time in adapting old material to modern uses, but his windows will not be satisfactory when they have been completed. Window trimming is judged by results, and he knows that with the means at his command he cannot hope for the best.

Nor is the merchant a gainer, for if the trimmer has to spend his time, and brains, adapting, rearranging, turn-window trimming, are a necessity, in every store, however small. This expenditure should be looked upon as an investment, and is a just and a legitimate one, as much so as advertising is, and should be properly provided for. The best way, is to make a certain appropriation each year for this purpose, increasing it, of course, as the business grows.

As the majority of stores are now reaching the end of the store year, this is a good time to take up this matter, and put it on a proper business basis. As soon as January is reached your trimmer will be preparing for Spring openings and Easter displays, and he will be needing new materials and fixtures, if he is to get the best results from his windows. Be assured that a reasonable appropriation for this purpose will be more than repaid, and results will fully justify the investment.

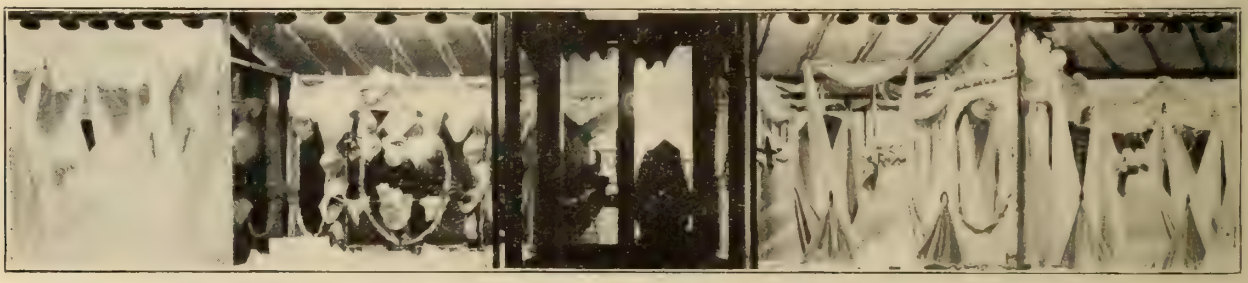
White Windows for January

Many Stores devote the early part of January to White Goods Sales—Some Hints about Lingerie and Corset Windows.

The fact that so far as the task of planning and preparation is concerned, the work of the window trimmer for the Christmas season is over, brings no cessation of work to him. As a matter of fact, while less elaboration is exacted, perhaps more real work is demanded of him in future preparation than during the work preliminary to the holiday season.

In many stores, January opens with a White Goods sale. Though this sale has lost the attractive element of novelty, store managers are loth to let it go the way of disused ideas. This is because it stops a vacancy, that would otherwise be difficult to fill, and furnishes an excuse for attracting people to the store. Therefore, the January White Goods sale promises to be a feature, with, possibly more or less modification for many years to come. The rest of January is taken up with stock reduction operations, preparatory to the general half-yearly inventory taking, at the end of the month. During January, therefore, department heads are in active competition for window space, and the decorator frequently has his work set, to satisfy the claims of all.



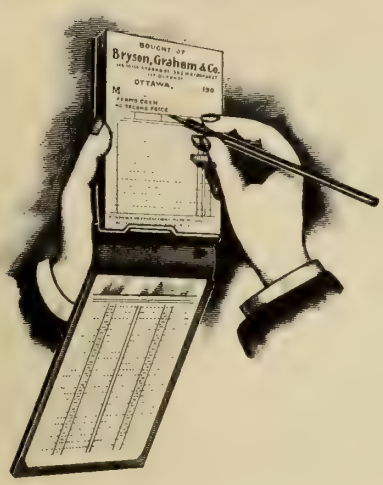
Everything that is white, carried in the store, is featured for this sale. In lingerie, by the way, the line with which this White Sale started, it is really more of a popular priced display of the new season's whitewear, that is held. For months previous to this sale manufacturers have been busy preparing for it, and not only moderate prices, but new ideas, in lingerie furnish the attraction.

The window trimmer, will be called upon to put in, in the first half of January, a number of white windows. Two of the most troublesome of these lines to handle, he will find, to be lingerie and corsets. In putting in a lingerie window, if the garments are not carefully and tastefully handled, the window display is apt to result in little more than a conglomeration of white. No display should be crowded with goods; but crowding is particularly fatal to a good whitewear window. The garments shown must be spaced, as it were, so that a goodly margin of background is seen. Generally speaking, the goods should be grouped—each garment by itself.

In making a display of this kind a good supply of the proper fixtures is very necessary. Metal stands with arms, and cross-pieces, should be used, and glass shelves, upon pedestals of various heights, give a good effect, and make a handsome display. Horizontal arms, up each side of the window, can be used with good effect, for showing the smaller articles, such as corset covers, drawers, etc. Governed by the size of the window, one or more groups, consisting of a tastefully arranged set, might be used. These sets consist of the following garments, viz: Chemise, drawers, corset cover, skirt and gown. Combination garments are a comparatively new feature with the general trade, and should be prominently displayed.

If the permanent background is either of paneling or mirrors, little else will be needed. If the background, for some reason, must be a fancy one, plainly stretched felt, burlap, etc., or a curtain hung in straight folds of either green, or bronze brown, will serve. Empire green, forms, by the way, a splendid background for the display of whitewear. These colors also harmonize well with the pink, sky or helio ribbons, run into the beadings as trimmings. The shade of green chosen should be used to cover the floor of the window. A good finish to the display would be a large bow, of the same colors, as the ribbons used for trimmings. The streamers being brought down and ending in front, or at one side of the window. Narrower ribbons—pink, sky, and helio, could be twisted around wires, and the whole formed into a big looped bow with the narrow streamers running out to the front, through the trim.

The larger stores—those that make a specialty of high-grade garments, might for a change, show an interior arrangement. Either a paneled background, or a background of plain burlap, headed by a handsome border paper, could be used. Suitable articles of furniture, such as chairs, tables and a dresser, could be introduced. Figures in negligee should be used, and the rest of the display should be arranged with studied carelessness on the chairs, hanging out of the partly opened drawers, etc. The floor for this display should be covered with a pretty light-colored carpet or rug.



Windows dressed by W. J. Keeler for D. E. Macdonald & Bro., Guelph.

There is a good deal of sameness about the average corset display. This is due to the goods being so intractable, and uniform, the only relief note, possible, being ribbons, or ribbon bows. For this reason a mixed display is best. About the best line to show with corsets is silk skirts. Corsets for display purposes are mounted upon satin covered forms. The majority of these forms are covered with white, but pink and blue are also used, and the color of the forms will, in a measure, determine the colors used in the rest of the display.

The glass topped stands used in the lingerie window may also be used for the corset display; and groups may be built up of a handsome skirt, one or more corsets on forms, and a few pairs of corsets, taken out of the box and laced up the back. When underskirts form part of the display, they should be well opened out, and should be draped in such a manner that they hide completely the stand, or stands. Hosiery, garters and corset accessories could be worked in with this display.

The background should be a simple one much after the order of that described for the showing of lingerie.

Oil Cloth Paint.

For lettering in black the best mixture is asphalt, two parts, and dry lampblack, one part. Mix thoroughly by adding a little of the lampblack at a time, then thin carefully with a little turpentine.; this dries glossy and hardens rapidly.

Ivory black ground in Japan and thinned with a little turpentine is another black. This dries with a duller finish, and is generally used by sign-painters. English vermilion dry, mixed thick with white demar varnish and thinned with turpentine, dries glossy. The best method for filling in letters on oilcloth signs to prevent the paint from running streaky is to lay the sign flat across two wooden horses or tables.

The best brushes for oilcloth work or other sign work are flat-pointed, red sable, ranging in size from Nos. 3 to 12. These are all for out-lining, or the small letters. To fill in you should have brushes ½-inch, 1-inch and 2 inches wide. Rinse in turpentine, after using.

Outdoor Cloth Transparencies.

If you desire a sign that will be of service for special occasions ; one that may be read clearly at night, as well as in the daylight, you should proceed as follows : Across a strong wooden frame stretch a cheap grade of bleached cotton ; tack the top end of the cotton to the back part of the frame, placing a tack every three inches; then stretch the cotton tight on the frame as you go along, tacking the lower end. The two sides are then stretched in the same manner. With colored chalk and twine you can snap lines across the desired distances for the height of your letters. Then take a piece of artist's charcoal and lightly mark out your letters or design. If you wish to expose the sign to the weather outside of your show window, you must mix oil colors as follows : Mix the color with oil and a small quantity of turpentine, adding some japan, just as you would with any oil paint.

Now take a wet sponge or a wet cloth and dampen the entire back surface of your stretched cloth, and with a lettering brush mark out all your letters or designs with clean-cut edges, taking care not to touch with paint any part of the design that is to be illuminated. This is called "cutting-in." Now, take one or two sizes of bristle brushes and paint the entire surface that is to be dark ; allow it to dry thoroughly, and with a cloth rub off all charcoal marks.

Indoor Transparencies.

For signs of this nature proceed in the same manner as explained above, but paint with water color by using a liberal amount of color and gum arabic, being sure that your color is pretty heavy. The best color for this purpose is black. Buy dry lampblack and mix it in a can. Mix it with your green as thick as possible, using a stick, and have it ready for lettering as thick as a free syrup, taking care that it is ground smooth before you outline with it. For filling-in you can use bristle brushes. To force the color into the sheeting makes it thoroughly opaque when painted. A pretty effect for such work is to show a row of buildings. This can readily be done by painting them in silhouette (out-line), marking out many little oblong spaces for windows, and all the buildings then blackened. Your sign may be cut in on top of this ; in a panel, or, you can letter it in black.

Water colors can be effectively used on satin. There is no special preparation necessary, and the paint can be applied exactly as on show cards. We would recommend that you use diluted glue sizing, instead of mucilage. Silver and gold bronze can be applied in the same manner.

Oil Colors on Satin.

Tube colors are used for this purpose. Apply a thin coating of white lead, from which the oil is first freed by placing the paint on blotting paper. When this is dry the other colors are applied. When no white background is desired, treat the colors in the same manner, but thin with a little turpentine.

Black in Japan.

Ivory black ground in Japan is used by coach and sign painters. It makes an excellent solid black surface which can afterwards be varnished to good effect. As has been explained earlier, it can also be used for oilcloth lettering.

Black Paint.

Black paint is more often used than any of the colors. For water color mixing, use lampblack or ivory black. They can be bought dry in small packages at trifling cost. They are, however, in this dry state, very undesirable colors to have about any premises, except a paint shop, as they are so light that a slight draught of air may blow them over a room and cause much damage. Unless you have a very large job, like a cloth transparency or wooden sign, we would advise you not to buy black in dry form.

If you do require it, mix it outdoors in a can, being careful to mix a small quantity at a time and thoroughly grind it. Should you want dull black lettering on card signs we would advise you to buy one jar of ivory black in "distemper." You need only a small quantity of this each time you write a sign. You must be sure, however, to mix some mucilage with it before using. The jar must always have about one-half inch of water on top of the paint before you put the cover on. In this manner it will always remain moist and fit for mixing.

Smalt.

Smalt is sand colored by a special process and mostly used by sign painters on wooden backgrounds, and also on oilcloth signs. Blue, black, green, brown and maroon are the most popular colors. The background is usually painted with lampblack, mixed with japan, and the sand is liberally sprinkled over it by placing the sign flat, then immediately setting it upright, and the surplus smalt comes off. It dries over night. Before using the smalt place your sign over a cloth or newspaper, so that the smalt will not be on your floor afterwards.

Flock.

Flock is ground shoddy or felt dyed in various colors, chiefly red, maroon and green. It is applied exactly like smalt, but is an undesirable substance in any store, as it is readily blown about. For interior signs that are lettered in gold, a flock sign has no equal in richness.

Allow us once more to caution you not to use your lettering brushes for mixing colors. Use any cheap brush, a stick, or the palette knife for this purpose. The mixtures here noted are used chiefly for flower and figure painting, but you often require many of them for card writing. There are a great many other color combinations besides those noted here, but they are not deemed of sufficient importance to warrant mention. You will soon learn them for yourself.

Two Colors.

To make green—Mix blue and yellow.
To make navy blue—Mix green and violet.
To make purple—Mix blue and red.
To make orange—Mix red and yellow.
To make peach—Mix vermilion and white.

Fancy Goods and Notions

Some Holiday Suggestions — Start Selling Early—Active Re-Order Business Reported — Japanese Goods are Strong — All Lines are Selling Well.

At the present writing, practically all of the local retailers are featuring their holiday lines, and in one or two instances, some of them already have their Christmas window displays arranged. As a result of observation in the larger retail stores, the prediction is ventured that the total figures of the holiday business for 1907 will reach record proportions.

The pre-Christmas season in the department store can be compared somewhat with the preparations for a battle. In other words, it is a case of get busy for action before the final rush sets in.

The merchant who fails to enter his store into this advance preparation to the fullest extent is likely to be all at sea, when the eager seekers after holiday goods invade the premises.

Assuming that the store has perfected plans, looking to the rapid delivery of goods and affecting the packing and shipping departments, it would then be in order to pay attention to the inside of the store. About one of the most necessary moves is the providing of ample floor space for the accommodation of an assured increase in the number of visitors.

Interior decoration is also an important factor. As a means of assisting in creating the impression that the store is headquarters of Santa Claus, considerable can be done in the way of decoration ; artificial flowers and maple leaves will suit this purpose admirably. Fireproof crepe paper also works in well. Booths can also be built. The W. H. Scroggie Co., Montreal, have ten special booths now in course of erection, five of which will be decorated and contain articles appropriate to the Christmas trade. These booths can be economically covered with bunting, crepe paper, or artificial leaves and flowers.

Special holiday boxes for smallwares are also of importance for the Christmas trade. The store that has a stock of these can be considered exceedingly fortunate.

One of the most important features of the Christmas programme is the effort to provide goods in sufficient quantities to meet all demands, and also to create a favorable impression. Depleted stocks, therefore, should be looked after jealously.

Some stores in the large centres find it a profitable investment to give the children a souvenir. These souvenirs are usually given some two weeks before Christmas. A small toy, costing but a trifle, will answer this purpose.

These are a few suggestions which the keen merchant may find useful.

In the wholesale fancy goods and notion field of Montreal and Toronto, the bulk of interest at the present time is centred on re-orders that are being received from both local and out-of-town retailers. No complaints are heard regarding the Christmas trade. Retailers have ordered freely and everything points to a good season.

Japanese Goods.

Jobbers and importing houses report unusual interest in all lines of Japanese goods. Houses which have specialized, and have maintained proper buying facilities, find difficulty in supplying the demand. Alert merchants on the lookout for increased sales and profit have seized upon Japanese goods, realizing that the element of sentiment will readily make sales. These goods are excellent profit makers, and are always interesting, artistic and useful. A selection can be made from the following : Lacquer ware, antimony ware, confectionery baskets, suit cases, china ware, silk fans and many others.

Merchants will find it profitable to look over the range of lacquered goods now shown to the trade. They consist of handkerchief, tie and glove boxes, cigar boxes, pencil boxes, trays, baskets, etc., and are shown in many styles and prices.

Ornaments, trays, photo frames, etc., in antimony ware are meeting with great success.

The demand for confectionery baskets and suit cases has never been better. These lines are manufactured from reed, bamboo, fancy straw, cane, etc., and are shown in all the leading shapes.

The stock of china ware is thoroughly representative, while designs and qualities maintain the high standard of previous years. Among the most prominent lines in china ware are tea sets, chocolate sets, three piece sets, cups and saucers.

A large variety of screens, also silk and linen goods are shown for the Christmas trade. All of these lines as holiday sellers have no equal.

Active Comb Business.

Retailers all appear to be doing a good business in fancy combs and hair ornaments for Christmas. While these goods have lagged somewhat of late the makers were busily engaged designing and constructing special machinery, new designs and improved methods of manufacture, all of which are telling their own story in the greatly increased sales being experienced.

It is a fact that fancy combs, due to the rapid strides which have been made in manufacture and the decreased prices, are in better demand than ever.

One of the latest styles in combs at retail is the high back comb. Shell, black and amber are selling freely in this line.

The new grey comb for elderly ladies is becoming quite popular and can be had at retail from 25c. up. Stores report that for Christmas trade there is a satisfactory demand for cut steel combs, and these are shown in a variety of designs.

Brilliant-set combs are having a heavy sale, while oriental designs have dropped somewhat behind the anticipated demand.

The black comb, quite suitable for mourning purposes is of a dull black finish and is having an average sale.

The new high back comb, with Swastika emblem attachment is one of the novelties for Christmas. It can be had at retail from 50c. up, and at the prices asked brings the retailer a good profit.

The mercury wing comb, also a favorite, is set with brilliants and at present is one of the best selling rhinestone combs on the market.

Originators of Combs That Sell

Bags Well Featured.

Bags are being featured to a noticeable extent by the large retailers and appear to be selling in large quantities ; at least the interest shown in them is very strong.

Leather goods are figuring in the holiday retail business to an increased extent. They have always been good holiday sellers.

The squaw bag is very popular, brown, black and tan being the principal colors selling, while red is in fair demand.

The Teddy Bear bag is increasing in demand, as is the fad. Many colors and styles are shown, of which the squaw shape predominates.

The Cheyenne bag is also meeting with marked favor. This bag harmonizes with the College hat and gauntlet gloves and the combination gives the lady using them a smart appearance. The keen retailer who handles the College hat and gauntlet gloves might do well to advertise the three articles together.

The balloon bag, mentioned last month in The Review, continues in popular favor in a high class way. This bag is shaped like a balloon and comes in smooth alligator and seal leathers.

The steel studded bag is also very popular and this season is to a great extent taking the place of the beaded bag.

Purse Showings.

As the interest in purses appears to be steadily increasing, and since purses were a satisfactory feature of the retail trade during the Fall months, the fancy goods buyer will be sure to be interested in the purse situation.

With the large retailers the sale of purses of all descriptions is quite active, lines retailing at from 25c. up being prominent. The most popular leathers are crocodile, morocco and seal. Other leathers are also shown, but are only in fair demand.

Fancy Buckles.

Showings, at retail, in fancy high grade buckles are prominent and the demand is increasing with the approach of the holiday season, many varieties being shown. Lines set with cameo stones and also amethysts are popular, though various shades of stones are shown.

Leather Belts to the Fore.

It looks as if there never will be a limit to the production of novel, odd or striking effects in women's leather belts. The few mentioned this month will, it is hoped, serve to give the retailer some inkling of the range of selection.

As before stated, styles are numerous. The principal stores in the large centres, Montreal and Toronto, finding a brisk demand for all lines of silk belts, which are shown in abundance. Cut steel belts are also favorites for Christmas, while wide embroidered elastic belts are as a novelty meeting with success.

Cross leather belts, in flat shapes, with pockets on the outside, shown in all the leading shades, are also prominent.

Taking the situation as a whole the retailers may look forward to a record-breaking season in all lines of fancy goods and notions.

"This," said the merchant, "is a most wonderful hair renewer. It is our own preparation."

"Well, give me a bottle," said the baldheaded man. "But, I say, come to think of it, why don't you use it ? You're pretty bald yourself."

"I can't use it. You see, I'm the 'Before Using' example. The 'After Using' example is out at luncheon. You should see him."

Among the Retail Associations

Efforts to Enlarge Scope and Increase Usefulness and Efficiency of Associations — Merchants in City Councils—Co-Operation Among Retailers Urged.

Information is Desired

What are Merchants Doing Towards Securing Wider Community of Interests? Questions Which They are Invited to Answer.

The organization of retail merchants' associations is, it is believed, one ot the most effective means of advancing the interests of local merchants, and, while the formation of these associations has not, unfortunately, been attended and followed by the good results which were anticipated, in the majority of instances, they have undoubtedly accomplished considerable in the way of bringing merchants together, and of securing greater co-operation of effort, resulting, in the main, beneficially to the business community.

The Review is desirous of encouraging the organization of these associations of merchants, and, with this in view is desirous of obtaining information in reference to those already established, the work they are doing and the opportunities afforded for the enlargement of their scope, and with this in view has prepared the following series of questions, which it invites its readers to answer:

(1) Is there an association of retail merchants in your town (or city)?

(2) What is the nature of the work carried on by it?

(3) Are the local merchants in hearty sympathy with the movement?

(4) If not, what general or specific reasons are assigned for this attitude?

(5) Has there been recently any question of special interest in which the association has taken any active part? If so, please state its nature and the result.

The readers of The Review are invited to interest themselves in this question to the extent of furnishing the information asked for above.

MERCHANTS AND ASSESSMENT ACT.

St. Thomas' Retail Merchants' Association in answer to a question from Professor McLean of Iowa State City, stated that the business tax in the new Assessment Act was giving satisfaction. Owing to the action of the Provincial Board in raising its per capita it is expected that the membership fee will be increased.

Retailers and Co-Operatives

Galt Retail Merchants Association Opposed to the System—Method for Collecting Bad Debts —Officers Elected.

Galt retail merchants, at their annual meeting, held November 26, discussed the question of co-operative storekeeping, a practice which, it is hardly necessary to say, they condemned as being injurious to the public interests, since it tended to kill competition, the only safeguard the buying public had.

A system adopted by the Galt Association for collecting bad debts was reported to have been taken advantage of largely by the members, with satisfactory results. It is proposed to extend its use.

One of the measures furthered by the association during the past year, and one that has been beneficial to the business section generally is that of the abolition of the peddler, at least from that vicinity.

The advisability of merchants taking an active part in municipal affairs is one of the important questions which the association will, it is expected, deal with in the near future.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, T. A. Rutherford; 1st vice-president, A. M. Edwards; 2nd vice-president, Jno. H. Laird; secretary, G. F. Hamilton; treasurer, F. H. Chapple; executive committee, Jno. Sloan, Alfred Taylor, William Mullett.

MERCHANTS IN CITY COUNCIL.

Guelph retail merchants are discussing the advisability of placing candidates representing their interests in the field for aldermen at the approaching municipal elections. A member of the association of retail merchants is authority for the statement that the merchants are now of the opinion that a change was desirable in the personel ol the council, and he intimated that in the interests of the business men and of the citizens generally, the merchants would probably consider it advisable to nominate candidates.

GUELPH RETAIL MERCHANTS' BANQUET.

On the occasion of the second annual banquet of the Guelph Retail Merchants' Association, Mr. Zieman, of Berlin, vice-president of the Retail Merchants' Association of Ontario and Mr. Beaudry, of Montreal, treasurer of the Dominion Association, delivered addresses, both urging greater co-operation among the members. J. C. Keleher, president of the Board of Trade, and one of the local speakers, referred to the conditions under which retail merchants worked, remarking that so far as he could remember they were in many cases the same to-day as they were twenty-five years ago. They had long hours, confining work, no bonuses or superannuation funds to fall back upon. As a means of improving these conditions, he advocated co-operation among those comprising the retail merchant class.

The Coaticook, Que., Observer, recently issued a special number in which references were made to the various business houses of the town. The dry goods trade was well represented and the merchants in this line give evidence of a progressiveness and enterprise which warrant the success their respective businesses have met with. Penman's, Limited, has a branch mill in Coaticook, employing 225 to 250 hands.

Wash Lines

Ginghams for Spring. Prices Firm on Desirable Lines. Prints Very High Priced. Big Sale of Suitings.

Notwithstanding all financial flurries, the prices on all desirable lines of wash fabrics are very firm, and, though little trouble is being experienced with deliveries some lines are decidedly scarce. Print prices are very high, and all round, the market is very firm. That there will be no break in the near future is the opinion of those in the know.

So far the advance business done has been of a highly satisfactory nature, and though orders now are not so large as they were, a short time ago, the interest in wash fabrics is well maintained.

Ginghams promise to be the popular line. This applies to both the lower priced and more expensive trade. In both lines, the patterns shown are of the same class. Both narrow and wide stripes come first, closely rivaled by checks and plaids. The difference comes in the grade of the material—the higher-priced lines being of a soft, sheer, silky finish, and weave that is very attractive. Besides the fancies, there is a good demand for the plain fabric.

The prominence of ginghams is likely to have a detrimental effect upon the sale of prints, particularly those of the better class. Print prices, generally speaking, are very high, and also so very firm that there is no possibility of shading.

The patterns of all printed fabrics for the coming Spring run chiefly to the classic, conventional, spot, stripe, ring, and similar patterns. Floral effects are in the minority, and are only bought to give variety, and for special uses.

Among novelty lines may be included cotton voiles, crepe stripes, imitation silk fabrics, batistes, mulls, muslins, etc. The plain fabrics in all these lines have been freely sampled.

The suiting trade has been a large one and cotton, and cotton and linen suitings for the better trade dress linens, have been in high demand. The new ponge suitings of linen and mercerized cotton, are standing high in this class. This is a fabric that has sold wherever shown.

Blue, in all shades, has been a heavy advance seller, all buyers, seemingly, having great confidence in this color. Cream and brown, in the natural linen shade, has also been well taken. Green, pink and helio have sold in the order given. Tan is the novelty shade, but as yet, has only been sparingly sampled, but may do better when the selling season opens.

White, in all lines, is staple, and a very heavy advance sale has been made, particularly in lawns, linens and mercerized fabrics, and also in mulls and batistes. All the sheer fabrics have been well considered in colors in much the same order as given above.

A feature of the wash goods trade is the increasing Fall and Winter business. The lines selling are the sheer white, plain, and floral printed fabrics, and also delicate evening shades, in plains and fancies.

A Changed Color List

The Color Range for Spring a Decided Change. Dark Shades the Fashion Feature for the Season of 1908.

Color will present a decidedly new feature next Spring. Instead of white and the delicate pastel shades that have been so much in evidence in the past few years, decidedly dark shades will be worn. The new color list is low in tone, and the ultra shades, with a few exceptions, are of the class known as art shades. As these colorings have been well introduced in millinery, they are not too novel to find a ready sale. The way has, as it were, been prepared for them in the popular trade.

Blue, particularly in the new art shades, promises to be a leading color—if, indeed, it is not the color most in evidence. Blues of the Copenhagen shades were very extensively worn at the New York Horse Show, and, as is well known, the fashions seen there have a very material influence upon the styles of the succeeding season. Though peacock blue is not prominent in the sample lines shown to the popular trade, it is a color that is gaining ground in exclusive lines, and will bear watching. Navies, particularly in bright shades, promise to be big sellers. The suit of navy serge promises, it is said, to be a big feature in the coming Spring. Browns, particularly in the tan shades, are looked upon to repeat their popularity of last Spring. These colors have not had anything like the run, in Canada, that they have in the States, and are certain to be free sellers on this market. In the lighter shades, modes, and also the pinkish tint, that ran a few seasons back under the name of onion, are expected to have some prominence. In fact the whole series of browns are sure to be much worn. Not only are buyers in the small centres placing orders for brown, but the exclusive trade is ordering large quantities of that color in all the high-grade fabrics.

The third place on the color list may be given to green. The plum and violet shades are the uncertain quantity, but, particularly in the larger centres, they show some strength. The interest of the popular trade has almost died out in grey, particularly in the lighter shades. In the ultra trade the smoke greys are beginning to enjoy considerable prominence.

Wine reds and even bright cherries and cardinals, are coming into favor for misses' and children's wear, and though there will be some sale for these colors in the Spring, a freer development will probably be delayed until the advent of the Autumn season.

Broadcloths in Favor

Plain and Fancy Broadcloths, in Chiffon Weights Freely Ordered for the Coming Spring. Large Buyers Have Already Placed Heavy Orders For This Fabric for the Fall of 1908.

Though fancies have been well taken, the bulk of the Fall trade has been done in plain cloths. And in this line there is no doubt that broadcloth is immeasureably in the lead. Plain broadcloth is in a particularly strong position, and in chiffon weights has been freely ordered out for the coming Spring. So great is the confidence felt in the future of this fabric that large buyers, and the jobbing houses, over a month ago, placed heavy orders for the Fall of 1908. Not only do plain broadcloths promise to hold their place in the Fall of 1908, but fancy patterns, particularly indistinct stripes and dark colored grounds, striped with black, promise to be favored for that season. This class of pattern has enjoyed an exceptional share of Parisian favor, and according to all accounts, was well worn by the smart set at the New York Horse Show. The very great and undiminished vogue of the tailored suit was also overwhelmingly demonstrated. All of which points to a free use of broadcloth for 1908.

Spring Prices Firm

The Tendency is Towards Fabrics Made From Fine Wools, for which Prices are Still Advancing Repeat Orders at High Prices.

The fashionable tendency strongly favors fabrics made from fine wools. Prices for the high grade wools, from which the yarns for making this class of materials are made, have advanced since the present wool season opened. On many of the new Spring fabrics, jobbers had to pay a fair advance, and the prices for other lines are held with exceptional firmness.

Every class of woolen fabric that shares fashion's favor is high-priced, and prices for the same show no signs of coming down, at any rate until after the buying for Spring has been completed. As a matter of fact, advances have been paid on duplicate orders given since the Spring selling commenced.

The cheviots, serges and rougher finished fabrics have only done fairly well this Fall with the popular trade. As the very latest fashion advices from London and New York show that they have made their mark there it is considered probable that they will make a stronger showing in the coming season. Serges, particularly in blue, are expected to be strong sellers. Cream serge, which has enjoyed such a remarkable run of popularity, is now considered a staple article in all departments. Smooth-finished worsted suitings in men's wear patterns promise to be one of the leading novelties in the early trade.

The novelty end of the trade consists largely of piece-dyed effects, showing stripes, plaids or checks, in the weaving. Phanton effects are very well represented and there are also some examples of more pronounced two-toned stripe and check patterns to round out the line. Chevron and herringbone weaves are also well thought of. The fancies for Spring are, as a general rule, very inconspicuous and come very near to plain effects.

There is a decided revival of sheer fabrics, and voiles of all kinds, but particularly the chiffon weaves, which promise to be in high favor. Not only are wool voiles selling, but silk, and silk and wool fabrics of this class, and in both plain and fancy effects, promise to do exceedingly well. Panamas, particularly in chiffon weights, taffetas, batistes and kindred weaves, in plains and stripes, and in plaids and checks, are classed among the leading sellers. Open mesh fabrics are included in the range of novelty woolens.

Mohair and lustre fabrics, both in plains and fancies, are going to have a much stronger representation this Spring. This is partly because of the price situation. A very sightly fabric can be had in this class, to sell at a popular price, and one also that possesses good wearing qualities.

The black goods department, though still important, is scarcely the big selling factor that it used to be. The tendency now is to present as youthful an appearance as possible, and even women of mature years no longer wear so much black. It was the general wearing of white fabrics that in a great measure led up to this change. Even grandmothers have been wearing white, and having gotten used to the wearing of light colors, and, noting the much younger appearance presented, the step to colors was an easy one.

The tendency in black fabrics is towards light-weight goods, and to transparent weaves, that can be worn over a white or a colored lining. Retailers will need a varied assortment of black goods for the Spring season. Plain voiles, in both silk and wool, and in all wool weaves, the new transparent fabrics, the many piece-dyed fancies, in stripes, checks, etc., will all have to be stocked. In black goods embroidered figures on a plain ground are shown, and there is expected to be some feeling for striped grenadines.

FORT WILLIAM STORE EXPANSION.

The industrial progress which Fort William, one of the "Twin Cities," at the head of Lake Superior, is making is reflected in the contingent expansion of its mercantile establishments. The John King Company, Limited, one of the large departmental stores of that city, has recently erected a four-storey addition to its store premises, which now comprise forty-five thousand square feet of floor space. The new addition is to be utilized largely for dry goods, millinery and men's furnishings, three departments to which special attention is paid. The company employs twenty-seven of a staff, and eight delivery horses are required to cover the city.

Think!

Two cents are all it ever costs to send a Letter Order. Think of the sales you gain through having the goods early--no waiting for travellers to call on you and no searching through stuff you don't want to find that which you think you can sell. All that's necessary is to sit down and tell us what you want, and you get the goods by return. Why not try it?

Just now we have a special 54" wool cheviot which we would like to send a sample of--a $1.00 cloth which you can retail at 75c.--profitably.

1449. Worsted yarns.—A Bradford (England) worsted spinner desires to be put into communication with Canadian manufacturers buying worsted yarns.

1467. Drawn linen work.—An importing and exporting firm of foreign merchants at Yokohama and Kobe (Japan), desires to form business connection with importers in Canada of Japanese drawn linen work. For this article they have a special department and trained staff and are desirous to extend their exports to Canada.

1471. Carriage cloths, box cloth aprons, &c.—A Yorkshire woolen manufacturing firm desires to hear from actual purchasers in Canada of their specialties, comprising carriage cloths, box cloth aprons, motor aprons and motor rugs.

1472. Shawls.—Inquiry is made by a Yorkshire manufacturing firm for wholesale houses in Canada interested in the purchase of cotton, wool or cashmere shawls.

1473. Wool laps and carbonized waste.—Yorkshire firm desires to develop a trade amongst users in Canada of wool laps and carbonized waste and invites inquiries.

1475. Wool.—Yorkshire firm will be pleased to submit samples of wool, tops or noils to Canadian buyers.

1476. Agent.—A Bradford (England) worsted spinner desires to act as buying agent for Canadian firms in the textile trade.

1477. Wool.—Bradford firm doing a large export trade in wool, noils, tops, wool laps and carbonized waste is open to hear from a reliable firm in Canada to represent them in these goods.

1480. Wool.—A Bradford firm wishes to hear from Canadian buyers of all kinds of wool, noils and tops.

1507. Ready-made clothing.—A London firm of clothing manufacturers in a position to undertake contract work on a large scale is desirous of hearing from Canadian consumers of ready-made clothing.

1513. Dyed cloths, Laces, &c.—A Leeds firm inquires for actual buyers in Canada of their special goods suitable for carriage builders, such as dyed cloths, laces, blind silks, tassels, taberets and coach builders' sundries in general.

1519. Flags and bunting.—A Yorkshire firm desires to find a market in Canada for all kinds of flags and bunting.

1534. Sudan goatskins.—A large firm of West African storekeepers, having their headquarters in Liverpool, desires to interest Canadian importers in Sudan goatskins, tanned and undyed, which they are desirous of exporting to the Dominion.

THE

'PIRLE' Finish.

Indispensable for the Open-Air Girl

"LADY'S REALM" says:

"The out-door girl who loves to cycle, walk and drive will never wear anything but a 'PIRLE' costume when she has once donned one. It may be the shower of May or the storm of November, her neat cloth dress will remain unspotted and unshrunk, and, when dry, will be as fresh as when it came from he tailors' hands."

REGISTERED TRADE-MARK

"MADGE" in "Truth" says:

"Every dressmaker ought to leave out a bit of selvedge somewhere with the 'PIRLE' stamp on it, as this affords an absolute guarantee for the wearer. "The proprietors undertake to make good any material so stamped that has been actually damaged by rain."

Dress Accessories

Gloves, Veilings, Lace and Embroideries — The High Favor in Which Braids are Held — The New Neckwear.

Lace

The Tendency for the Heavier Laces — Present is the Time to Clear Stock of Remnants, Etc.

The fashion tendency is all in favor of the heavy laces, with Irish crotchet as the leading lace. Venise and guipure are also selling. Princesse is now coming to the front and is the most favored for evening wear. Bands and allovers have been the big sellers, but edgings and narrow galoons have also been doing well. In the millinery end Chantilly is coming to the front. This lace is freely used as a trimming for both velvet and fur hats. Irish crotchet, venise, guipure and cluny are all good sellers. There was a lessened demand for valenciennes during the early part of the season. This lace is picking up and the counter demand is a free one.

Novelty Stock Collar. Boxed for the Christmas trade. Shown by Rhys D. Fairbairn.

Right now, Mr. Merchant, is your time to clear your stock of remnants, odds and ends, and stickers. Fancy work, doll dressing, etc., are now under way, and bargains in lace, even if the goods are not quite up-to-date, will be eagerly sought for.

Embroideries

A Very Good Advance Business Done. The New Filet and Lace Patterns in High Favor.

A wonderfully good advance business has been done in embroideries. This is due in a great measure to the newness of the patterns and to their attractiveness. Filet patterns have decidedly caught on, and the new lacy effects have been excellent sellers. Bands in wide and medium widths, and very wide flouncings are very strong. Matched sets continue in great favor and come in handsome combinations. The new blouse frontings have sold well and also yoke effects for waists, and also for babies' dresses.

Eyelet and blind work are much in evidence and in the cheaper bands and edgings some extra good patterns are shown. There is the usual choice of patterns in corset cover embroideries.

Fancy Goods.

The slight lull in the sale of belts has given way to more active conditions. Retailers are now rounding out their Christmas line and are placing fair sized orders for belts. The variety of styles is extensive, but on this market at least leather belts are the big sellers. Crush belts are the most popular style and the newer ones are made in wider widths than was the rule at the beginning of the season. Contrary to this, tailored styles, and the new shaped belts are becoming narrower. Indeed the style idea, not only in leathers, but also in elastics, is for narrower belts. Plain harness buckles in pearl, brass, and nickel are being replaced by more ornate buckles. Nor are these buckles the only ornamentation. There is also a more general use of handsome back ornaments. Glace kid is coming into use for better class belts. The new idea being a narrower belt, shaped to fit the figure.

In New York the belt of the moment is of elastic, and though steel studded elastics are still selling, they are not the big item that they have been.

Braids in High Favor

Braids of All Sorts Continue Good. Pulls Selling for Spring. Paris Favoring Braids.

Braid is still the trimming par excellence, and almost all varieties of braid are good. In fact braids as a trimming continue to dominate the situation. Parisian dressmakers are using braids extensively upon the tailored suits so much the vogue this Fall. Not only is the coat lavishly ornamented now, but the skirt as well. The new circular skirt is braided knee high, a very favorite method being to use rows of braid in chevron, around the new circular gored skirts.

Soutache braiding is more used than ever, many of the new coats being braided all over in pattern. Tailored styles in velvet are very much braid trimmed and in this fabric and in cloth, the edges of the coat are often finished with a binding braid. Flat braids that show a heavy pattern are excellent in both black and colors.

Gloves

Short Lengths Being Pushed by the Trade — Glace Finish Goods in Demand—Fabric Gloves Consignments Now on Their Way —Holiday Season Goods in Demand.

The glove business throughout the past month among the jobbers continued good with the holiday trade opening up satisfactorily, and merchants, in many cases, are well advanced with the usual Christmas preparations.

As most stocks at retail are somewhat depleted, jobbers are looking forward to large orders during the month, leading up to Christmas. The short lengths are those selling at present in the glove trade with blacks and tans as the principal colors. The next shades in favor are greens wine shades, and a few dark grays. Qualities are good, owing to the fact that prices are somewhat easier.

Long gloves are selling fairly well, while lines for evening wear are much in demand, 12—16—20 and, in some cases, 24-button lengths being prominent. Favorite colors, for evening purposes are represented by such soft shades as pale straw, light tans, bluish tints and blacks. At present these shades are being given preference over the staple white. Black, as usual, is the more popular with elderly ladies.

With reference to deliveries of fabric gloves for Spring, some importers state that they have been advised that consignments are now on the way and keen merchants will doubtless be glad to learn this, as it gives promise that prompt deliveries for Spring may be expected.

At retail, wrist gloves in glace finish are having preference. In fact, they are selling much better than in the corresponding month a year ago. Merchants also, find tans very high style. Other colors, such as navies, grays and blacks are also prominent.

Long gloves, while in demand, are not selling as freely as a few months ago. The prospects are, however, that the demand will improve at Christmas. The 12 and 16-button lengths continue to be popular.

Ribbons

Many New Designs and Color Combinations Offered for Spring—Wider Millinery Widths in Favor—Some of the Prominent Colors.

Collections of ribbons are now being rounded out for the Spring season, 1908, and notwithstanding the many beautiful designs and color combinations which were features of recent seasons, new designs and new combinations are being freely offered for next year.

Travelers are on the road now and all report a good business in Spring orders. In ribbons shown by the leading manufacturers the wider millinery widths, so far, are favorites.

Velvet ribbons, which were somewhat scarce during the Summer months, are being ordered freely, the reason attributed being the fact that indications point to a free use of these lines as a dress accessory.

Dresdens, also, are expected to receive a fair share of the ribbon business. In this line the fancy flower effect is most prominent, while the demand for satin ribbons is only fair with plaids absolutely behind schedule and little called for.

Spring Colors.

Colors shown for Spring are white, navy, cream, mais, ciel, turquoise, nile, rose, gray, coquelicot, cardinal, reseda, helio, fawn, modore, marrow, royal, navy, emerald, myrtle, champagne, mexique, vieux, eminence, moss, sultan vieux blue and black and also many others. Those prominent for Spring, up to the present writing, are ciel, rose, gray, modore, marrow, navy, mexique and vieux blue. Black and white ribbons always staple will, it is expected, have their usual sale.

So far as immediate demand is concerned ribbons for the holidays show the most activity, with a fair interest in soft effects generally, such as taffetas. Both plains and fancies are selling well.

Veilings

Splendid Business Reported in Veilings During Past Month—Ring-dot Effects Among the Novelties Seen—Lace Edge and Chiffon Veils.

The continuous introduction of novelties is the chief reason for the popularity of veilings this season.

A number of mesh novelties have been introduced and ring-dot effects are numbered among the best. Many styles in hairline and Tuxedo meshes are selling well. Brown, black and navy are the favorite colors, while in the chenile dotted effects, magpie must be included. Brown, in medium shades, is growing stronger and the new Khaki, so popular in Paris, promises to be one of the future hits.

Lace-edged Made Veils.

Lace-edged made veils continue in popular favor. Mesh veils are good in colors and black, whereas, the chenile-dotted effects are especially good in magpie.

Chiffon Veils.

Chiffon veils are worn more than ever at this time of the year, with the dark shades, as in mesh veils, prominent.

Retailers are advised to look well into the possibilities of novelties. A line of novelties in a staple stock always attracts the attention of the patrons, and the profits, too, are sufficiently large to make the extra attention given them worth while.

Many new styles of drape veils are popular, the majority being in fancy net effects, and the veils must be large enough to cover the hat and float behind. So large are many of the new veils that dress nets are beginning to be used in place of the ordinary veilings. Many handsome border effects are shown. Ribbon borders, fringe borders, borders of Chantilly lace medallions, borders of fancy chenile, etc., are all selling. Veils themselves are in square umbrella, and in long scarf shapes. Very large dots of chenille are seen on the ultra styles. The chiffon veil is a big seller for auto veils.

The colors wanted are the popular colors of the season, with browns, tans, blues and greens the great sellers.

Ladies' Neckwear

Boxed Goods for the Christmas Trade—Good Showing of Chiffon Styles.

The usual demand for boxed neckwear, which is always a good seller at this time of the year, is now being experienced. Up to the present, the sale has been for the straight band, and pointed stocks. Now, however, more interest is being shown in jabot effects, and some very elaborate styles are in evidence. The big stores are beginning to feature lines of fancy neckwear, and some very important jabot ideas are among them.

Boxed neckwear is, as usual, strong. In addition to boxing, one firm is mounting each collar upon a card. The device is an exceedingly simple one, so much so that one wonders it was not done long before. The stock so mounted, shows up splendidly and can be placed on the card, or detached from it instantly, as no pinning is required. Just how it appears on the card is seen in the accompanying illustration, which shows the stock mounted on a good card and boxed. The collar cannot slip down, and crushing is impossible, while the stock shows up much more attractively for being mounted upon the card. Frillings in neck-lengths, boxed, form another good Christmas line.

The style idea, however, centres now in smart lingerie effects and in bow accessories; in lace and silk bows, ties, knots, etc., also in jabot effects in silk, mull and in lace. These are the Beau Brummel and Marie Antoinette styles.

Manufacturers are busy along these lines, and for the Spring season, new ideas and novelties in large variety will be shown. Dainty little creations in silk, both plain and fancy, in satin, and bengaline bows, made either of ribbons or piece goods, are in preparation. The chief characteristics of these goods, are the color combinations, and the smart daintiness of their finish. They are strictly in keeping with the all prevailing tailored styles, and will give a mannish touch to the neck dressing that is irresistible.

New York is out with a new idea to take the place of the stiff linen collar. It consists of a straight upstanding band of linen with an edge of heavy lace—Irish crochet being the preferred one. This stock fastens at the back and is very becoming. There are many new ideas in silk scarves. All are of soft sheer silk. Many show Pine patterns, and Paisley borders.

WOOLEN MILLS ENLARGING.

Work on an addition to Patterson's Woolen Mills, at Preston, 75x150 feet, with a wing 30x60 feet, is practically completed, and the installation of the twenty additional looms will be proceeded with at once. The new addition gives 13,050 square feet of extra floor space.

It is built of brick and concrete, one storey high, and is said to represent the most modern type of factory construction. Other additions are to be made in the near future.

THE PEABODYS COMPANY.

An Ontario charter has been granted to The Peabodys Company, Limited, with head offices at Windsor, and authority is given "to manufacture and sell overalls, jackets, trousers and all other clothing for use by working men." The capital stock of the company is twenty thousand dollars, divided into four hundred shares of fifty dollars each. The incorporators are. Stephen Adelbert Griggs, of Walkerville, manufacturer; Witter Johnston Peabody and Thomas Lee Brent Lyster, of Detroit, Mich., manufacturers; and Horace Baxter Peabody and Elsie Sibly Peabody, of Windsor, Ont. These also constitute the provisional directors.

No Interest in Separate Coats

Separate Coats Continue to be a Neglected Factor Both Weather and the Prevailing Style Against Them.

Little business has been done as yet in separate coats, the broadcloth suit having usurped the place of the former. Not only has the suit been fashionable, but the weather has been against the selling of wrap coats. Now that the season is so far advanced, a set of furs is added and the suit is made to do duty through the rest of the season.

In the larger centres, quite a business has been done in evening coats, in pastel shades in cloth. These are for the most part lined with white or light shades of satin, and are trimmed with silk braid.

Some showing is now being made of imitation furs, in both short, pony and three-quarter lengths, and these styles and the furlined coats should sell when the weather becomes seasonable.

Paris Fashion Notes

Woolen, Velvet and Cloth Tailor Modes generally worn in Paris. Braiding Still the Chief Trimming.

Tailor-made suits are those most generally seen in Paris now. The cloth skirt is generally short. It is either gored or plisse, and is trimmed with numerous braidings or passe-menteries. Short boleros have at last entirely disappeared and have given place to long jackets, which open in order to show a vest or a pretty blouse. With these suits long stoles of fox or chinchilla are the favorite wear.

Laferriere, Drecoll & Doucet are turning out numerous velvet suits for walking. One seen at Laferriere's may be accepted as typical. It was of black velvet, and the skirt, which just touched the ground, was trimmed half way up with large dashes of heavy passementerie, while these dashes also encircled the whole of the skirt. The long vest, opened in front, was trimmed at the foot with the same passementerie as far as the hips. The long sleeves were cut in the leg-of-mutton style—that is wide at the top, and narrow below the elbow. This is the regulation sleeve for tailor-mades now.

The sleeves of evening gowns are made of many tissues, and in both color and material often differ from the rest of the gown. Tulle is much used for this purpose. Another striking fashion is the free use of light weight cloths for evening gowns. Thus a creation of Doucets was a princesse gown of chalk-white cloth, very close fitting at the waist, and buttoned at the side. The low rounded neck-opening is filled in with chestnut tulle, and there are braces of embroidered white cloth.

Long sleeves of the chestnut tulle protrude from under the wide over-sleeves of the cloth. The edge of the over-sleeve and the edge of the skirt is bound with sealskin, and above this binding on the skirt is a deep embroidered band of cloth. The high neckband has a plisse of chiffon—or in other words a chiffon ruching, and a lingerie stock trimmed with lace. This, by the way, is the fashionable finish to high-necked gowns.

For dinner gowns white is in great favor, and quite young girls are wearing these princesse gowns of white, blue or pink cloth and tulle. Gowns of chiffon and tulle are often seen. These are frequently adorned with silver braces, or with panels of the tissue embroidered with a large flower. Instead of folds and tucks, bands of fur and heavy embroidery trim the foot of most gowns. Tunic skirts are in great favor for evening wear.

The present trend of fashion would seem to point to a further development along present lines, rather than to any radical change. The appearance of the draped tunic in classic fashion, may be an indication of something new in that direction. Of itself, it is only another form of the Empire style, which has so long and so successfully modified fashions.

Suit of Burgundy Velvet, trimmed with heavy black Braid. Embroidered and Braided Vest of Pale Tan Cloth.

For Winter wear there is a perceptible lengthening of the sleeve, many evening gowns being made with long rucked sleeves of tulle or chiffon, or plain fitted ones of lace. The three-quarter and seven-eighth sleeves are very well worn, and though the long sleeve is gaining some ground, it will hardly dominate the coming Spring and Summer season.

The long drooping shoulder, Japanese fashion, is still with us, and Spring fashions certainly promise fresh modifications of this style.

Skirts are extremely close-fitting in the upper part, falling in soft folds around the feet. Enbroidered bands and folds, braiding, etc., are the usual trimmings.

The Suit Situation

The Broad-Cloth Suit Dominates—Velvet Suits for the Better Trade—Suits for the Coming Spring.

Undoubtedly the greatest amount of business has been done this Fall in the tailored suit. Indeed this margin may be even further narrowed and it may be said that the bulk of the business has been done in the broadcloth suit. In the exclusive end of the trade, some business has been done in velveteen suits and had prices been lower no doubt this business would have been further extended. The cloth suits are almost invariably made with some form of the pleated skirt, with one or more tucks or bias bands of the material. The velvet suits have the new gored circular skirt with the same form of ornamentation as on the cloth skirt.

The suit coat most favored is of medium length, 36 inches being most frequently seen. The shape is the mannish, easy fitting one and plain tailored effects are most in evidence. Where any trimming is used, it is of braid, all elaboration being left to the custom made suits. Here the vest is a feature and is of silk or cloth, often embroidered and braided.

At the New York Horse Show tailored suits of this description were universally worn and these plain tailored models, only made up of more Spring-like materials, will be featured in the coming Spring. Judging from present fashion ideas, Eton and bolero styles at last are out of the showing. Japanese effects will possibly occupy some place in the novelty lines. These suits will be made up in light weight broadcloths, serges, panamas, etc., both in plain and in quiet fancy effects.

The colors are brown, green, wine and medium greys.

In separate skirts, voiles and chiffon panamas promise to be sellers. These are side pleated and trimmed with self folds and strappings or strappings or folds of silk.

Lingerie Waists

New Models Attractive—Japanese Styles for Spring — Hurry-up Orders for the Christmas Trade.

Orders have not been placed as freely as usual for lingerie waists for the Spring trade. This is not because there is any lack of confidence in white washing waists, but because merchants are placing all orders now in a conservative fashion. They are becoming alive to the fact that lingerie waists will be wanted for the Christmas trade and not a few hurry-up orders have been received.

The new lingeries are more than usually attractive and the practical modifications of the Japanese idea are introducing a welcome element of novelty into the new lines. The way has been well prepared for these kimona effects and they are so pretty and at the same time so practical that they may be safely accepted as sellers.

Freer use will be made of the heavier laces, such as crotchet and venise, and also cluny on the higher priced waists. The new filet and lace patterned embroideries will also give an appearance of something new to the Evening Coat of Ceil Blue Broadcloth, trimmed with Metal Lace Embroidery, Soutache and fancy Braid.

White Spring waist Valenciennes will as usual be extensively used and there are some very good designs featured amongst the older blindwork and other staple embroideries. Tuckings are of course freely used. More thought is being given to the appearance of the back of the waist. All the ornamentation is not now placed on the front of the waist. The trimmings consist chiefly of bands which are applied in a flat effect. The broad shoulder style rules, a wide tuck often being placed to come over the shoulder joining. The three-quarter sleeve is universal and is cut fuller and is more elaborately trimmed.

Lingerie

Manufacturers About Ready for December Delivery—January Sales Will Generally be Held.

December deliveries of lingerie promise to be made in excellent shape. The lines turned out, in spite of the high cost of materials, promise to be attractive and do not show any skimping, either in size or material. The favorite gown is still the slip-over. The newer ones have deep yokes, built up of bows of lace and embroidery. Sleeves are very elaborate and are generally of the wing or bell shape. Some of the newer ones are cut in one with the yoke of the garment. Petticoats show deep flounces, with wide beadings.

Imported lines are often trimmed with cluny and other real or hand-made laces. There is a growing interest in combination effects, but these must be perfect in fit and design.

AN IMPORTANT REORGANIZATION.

Watt & Shapiro Mfg. Co., 367 St. James Street, Montreal, is the style of a new "in name only" garment concern, the firm being formerly D. H. Shapiro. Thos. J. Watt, formerly of the Dominion Cord and Tassel Co., Montreal, joined forces last month with Mr. Shapiro to form the above mentioned firm. Much new capital has been put in and the new firm looks forward to a good share of the garment trade.

Thos. J. Watt, although comparatively a young man, has been identified with the Dominion Cord and Tassel Co. for seven years, in latter years acting as manager. He is putting the capital into the garment concern, as well as a good deal of business energy and experience. He has an intimate acquaintance in the retail trade, having had a thorough experience with the W. H. Scroggie Co., Montreal, and is thus in hearty sympathy with the retailers in their garment problems.

David H. Shapiro has been identified with the Canadian garment trade for over twelve years, and has a reputation as a superior designer and manufacturer. The new firm is laying plans for larger manufacturing facilities to accommodate an anticipated larger trade.

THE CANADA WEBBING COMPANY.

An Ontario charter has been granted to The Canada Webbing Company, Limited, incorporating Frederick Hunter Lythe Richmond Wyllie Hart, Oscar Herman King, Olive Frances Page and Lena Duff, all of Toronto a company, the objects of which are "to manufacture, buy, sell and deal in all kinds of insulating tapes, elastic bands, and dry goods, and to buy, sell, deal in, import and manufacture machines or parts thereof necessary for the manufacture of the rubbing, insulating tapes, elastic bands and dry goods. The share capital of the company is $100,000, divided into one thousand shares of one hundred dollars each. The head office of the company will be in Toronto.

Of Interest to Salespeople

Some Essential Qualifications of a Successful Salesman—Enthusiasm of European Clerks a Commendable Feature—Pointers for Salespeople.

Clerk and His Employer

How a Clerk Would Solve an Important Problem—Mutual Feeling of Responsibility is Essential.

On "The Relations of a Clerk to his Employer, and his Attitude Towards the Patrons of the Store," a clerk has, at the request of The Review, submitted the following, as embodying his ideas on the above question, which is one of vital importance to both the clerk and the employer, whose interests are mutual :

Upon proper and mutually satisfactory relations between the clerk and his employer depends very largely the success of any store. It can be seen, therefore, that to this question too much consideration cannot be given. Unfortunately, but a small proportion of clerks appreciate their responsibility in contributing to the success of the particular establishments with which they are identified, and are satisfied to render a purely prefunctory service, taking little practical interest in the general welfare of the store, the result, of course, being that such a clerk does not do his best work—no clerk can who does not interest himself beyond the actual performance of assigned duties. Little consideration is required to convince one of the fact that from the standpoint of the clerk himself, such a course is a suicidal one, so far as his hopes of a successful business career are concerned.

A clerk who is as solicitous of the welfare, and progress and good name of the store in which he is engaged as he is for his own personal advancement, has taken a long step towards making himself indispensable to his employers.

This interest will manifest itself in various ways. In the first place, there will always be an unswerving loyalty to "the firm." Your particular store is the most reliable, most progressive, and in every way the best that you know of. There will be no complaints to your young friends during the evenings of the "unfair" treatment of the "old man." Generally, you will find that he is as good to you as you deserve, and as good as the average employer.

The ability to make friends of the store's customers is one of the most valuable assets a young clerk can possess. You've noticed, of course, how in some stores customers will wait for a certain clerk to serve them, and generally, it will be found that this particular clerk has attained his popularity by his willingness to go out of his way to satisfy the customers. This is a faculty doubly valuable to its fortunate possessor—it increases his value to his employer, and builds up for himself a reputation, which, should he embark in business for himself, will constitute a quality easily convertable into business success.

The Other Side.

On the other side of the relationship—the attitude of the employer to his clerk—there are many things a clerk might say. In the first place, give him credit for doing his best—unless you're satisfied he is not—and encourage him to take an interest in your business. Ask him to give his opinion in respect to certain new methods you have in contemplation, and encourage him to make suggestions as to means by which the store may be improved, and the customers better served. He is, perhaps, in a better position to hear the adverse criticism made on your store than you are, because your friend is naturally disinclined to tell you about the unfavorable comparison he heard made the other day between your store and another. Your clerk likely heard it too, and if he is encouraged he will tell you of it, and, possibly be ready with a suggestion as to means by which the desired improvements could be effected.

Make him feel that it's his store, as well as yours—that he is co-responsible with you for its success. A little commendation and an assurance that his work is appreciated will act as an incentive to him, and more consistent work will result.

In a word, arouse an enthusiasm in your clerks, and if he is the right kind he will respond with the best there is in him, and if he's not the right kind, and does not give the service you have reason to expect, your only source is to replace him with one who gives evidence of his possession of the necessary initiative and other qualities calculated to encompass his success and your satisfaction.

ENTHUSIASM OF CLERKS.

The enthusiasm of clerks on the stores of English and French cities, and their evident display of interest in the wishes of the customer were peculiarities noticed by Joseph Basch, general manager of the Seigel-Cooper store, in Chicago, on a recent trip to Europe, and it forms the subject of an interview, in which he refers to some points of interest to salespeople generally. He stated that a customer entering a store in England or France is immediately greeted in the most courtly and deferential manner, and throughout the length of his or her stay is made to feel that the uppermost concern of everybody in the store is to serve him or her. The entire mental forces of the clerk are centered on the transaction in hand, and if kindness, patience, courtesy and a knowledge of the goods will win a sale, it is won.

Know the Goods Well.

"European salespeople have the interests of the store at heart to a degree that made me envious," he said. "They show the goods in an enthusiastic way that commands interest, and their very evident knowledge of the stocks they are handling commands respect. At the same time, their respectful bearing commands the kindly interest of the customer, and if a sale is not effected, it is either because the customer is unable to find anything that pleases, or because he lacks the money. It is not because of any lack of interest or knowledge of the salesperson, for that individual has the ambition and the ability to get the business."

Mr. Basch explains that in busy times, when customers come faster than they can be waited on, the floor managers undertake to interest customers till they can find a salesperson. First, finding the customer a seat, the floor manager tells her he will go and get a clerk at once, and this he does, getting one from some nearby kindred department.

The Canadian Fur Trade

Christmas Preparations Active—Good Business Prospects for the Holiday—Manufacturers are Busy—Some of the Styles.

The Sorting Trade

A Good Business Reported—The Outlook for the new season so far as Raw Materials are concerned.

Despite the financial situation, which seems to occupy the minds of a great many persons, a rigid enquiry discloses the fact that the amount of loose change in the pockets of the average Canadian purchaser of manufactured furs has been sufficient to keep practically all of the prominent fur manufacturers extremely busy. No doubt, in the country districts and in certain other sections, trade has been somewhat quiet, but in giving a resume of conditions affecting any particular trade one must observe conditions as they exist in the country at large.

The results of The Review's interviews with the actual manufacturers show that trade is good. Repeat orders are fully up to the average with the better class of goods moving freely. The head of one well-known concern interviewed, stated that they had been compelled to keep the factory running to the limit and even working on Saturday afternoons. This is particularly gratifying in view of the fact that the average manufacturer at this time of the year does not find it necessary to do this, unless repeat orders are coming in plentifully.

Ladies' wear is the strong feature at present, the demand for fur jackets, embracing as it does, a large volume of expensive garments, is much better than in former seasons. High-priced mink sets, ermine sets, fine Persian lamb, fox, lynx and sable are constantly on the move. The only complaint heard is on the slow movement of men's fur coats. This, however, is bound to be remedied when the hard Winter weather sets in throughout the country. The mild weather of the Fall and up to the present has mitigated against a satisfactory sale of men's fur garments.

New Season Outlook.

The approach of the next purchasing season is not looked forward to with any special degree of pleasure, chiefly because of the fact that certain lines of raw material, essential to Canadian fur manufacturers, give an indication of starting off at high prices; while other goods seem to show a tendency to decline. The feeling in the trade is for short buying until the market settles, since it is believed that from prevailing conditions prices should, in certain lines, come down to a more sane basis. This, of course, cannot be brought about if purchasers scramble for the raw material early in the year. However, on the whole, the fur manufacturers of Montreal, the admitted centre of this industry in Canada, have little cause for complaint at the volume of business secured. Further, some manufacturers are already figuring on a good natural increase of business for 1908. It is not the concerns that make a specialty of seeing how cheaply they can sell goods that get the most satisfactory results, but those which build up a reputation for dependable goods. The same may be said of the buyers, good furs, properly made, from seasonable stocks, are rarely offered at prices which convey the idea of cheapness, and the closeness of prices on individual articles as listed by the leading makers, gives evidence of the exactness with which calculations are made, with a view to doing business on a fair basis.

Now for Christmas.

Managers of stores in which the fur department has been pushed at holiday time state that results have been beneficial in every way. Muffs and small neck pieces, and a host of small novelties will prove attractive trade-pullers, and by booming this department the sale of garments is also helped.

Metropolitan Displays

A Noticeable Feature of the Season--Varieties of Fur-lined Coats--Auto Coats of loose-fitting style--Tight-fitting Sacques.

Retail furriers, principally in Montreal and Toronto, continue the good work started last month at the openings; and the displays, both window and interior, have never been equalled during many fur seasons. Keen merchants this year have spared neither expense or labor in making their stores as attractive as possible.

One of the retail stores visited by The Review last month was John Henderson & Co., 229 St. James St., Montreal, a firm which has been in the retail fur business since 1834, and is consequently one of the oldest fur houses in the Dominion. Their display was commendable. Some of the lines noticed in Montreal stores are :—

Fur-lined Cloaks.

Ladies' fur-lined cloaks are shown in many varieties. The styles are full three-quarter lengths and are lined with Russian grey squirrel, white and grey squirrel, and the throats of Hudson's Bay sable. Mink and Hemster are also popular fur linings. High style trimmings for the 1907-1908 season are black lynx, blue lynx, ermine and Persian lamb.

Auto and Pony Coats.

Styles of garments this year will again be of loose-fitting type, such as automobile and pony coats. The box back will also be prominent. Auto coats will range from 46 to 50 inches long and pony coats from 22 to 26 inches. The fur skins most in demand for auto coats are mink and caricule. Black pony skin coats are trimmed with black lynx.

Staple Sacque Coat.

Types of the ordinary sacque coat, tight-fitting back and loose front, are again seen in abundance. Fur skins prominent are caricule, Persian lamb and seal, with fancy brocade linings as favorites. The popular lengths are from 22 to 24 inches.

Small Fur Prices.

Neck-pieces are in great demand just now, and are shown in various styles. Stoles, four-in-hands and princess boas are all well represented. The most stylish styles are those that are made with double stripes. Mink is prominent as a skin for small fur pieces. This skin is very high in price, but notwithstanding the fact the sale of neck-pieces in it are increasing. Hudson's Bay sable is much in demand in stoles and boas, while Ladies' 18-inch loose jacket, with cloth cuffs, beaver cloth, plain stitching or appliqued, muskrat lining, mink collar and revers, manufactured by the Paquet Company, Limited, Quebec.

Russian sable is also a very popular fur in the high-class stores. Russian sable muffs can be had at retail as high as $300. The feeling for ermine is also strong, while chinchilla is to the front, and black lynx is again a favorite.

Fur-lined Coats.

Fur-lined coats are selling fairly well, in spite of the tight money situation. The shells are well made and the linings for this season are mink, in a few cases with Russian muskrat, and Canadian muskrat as the favorites. Seal is also used. The trimmings are usually Persian lamb and otter. As regards styles, the loose-fitting coats continue to hold first position.

Raccoon coats are also seen and are selling in about the same proportion as previous seasons. The staple styles are again shown.

THE PAQUET CATALOGUE.

Fur catalogues have passed the experimental stage and are now recognized by manufacturers and retailers alike as a valuable aid in securing special orders. This season manufacturers have vied with each other in turning out attractive and useful catalogues for retailers. It has remained, however, for the Paquet Company, Limited, Quebec, to turn out the largest and most attractive publication of this kind seen this season, if, indeed, it cannot be said that never in this country has it been surpassed for beauty and novelty. It is in book form with flap cover, the overlined part fastened to the back cover with a Paquet stamp. The cover is of a shade of light brown with firm name and lettering embossed in a beautiful gold. The catalogue in itself numbers 51 pages, and measures eight inches in width by eleven inches in depth. The clear-cut engravings, printed on both sides of the paper, show the latest styles in ladies' and gentlemen's furs, and are entirely free from advertising matter. The engravings speak for themselves and should prove of great interest to those seeking the latest in furs. The cuts are very easily shown, and will, no doubt, facilitate the selling of various lines. They embrace everything from the Persian lamb jacket to select lines of muffs, stoles, fur neckwear, caps and collars. At the bottom of each cut is to be found a general description. For instance, on page one, the cut number is 5851. Below the cut is a description in both the French and English language, as follows: Ladies' 48-inch loose jacket, with cloth cuffs, beaver cloths, assorted colors, plain stitching or appliqued, 36-inch muskrat lining, 12-inch skirt, black lasting, mink collar and revers, as illustrated. Can also be lined with hamster, grey and white squirrel, brown marmot or susliki, and combined with genuine skunk, mink, dyed skunk, coon, red or dyed Isabella fox, natural or tipped muskrat, astrachan, black oppossum; shawl or notched collar. One the last three pages are to be found directions for self measurement and the crest of the firm. A price list, accompanied, of course, by the catalogue, will be sent for the asking.

FUR DEALER ASSIGNS.

Adolphe E. Clement, hat and fur dealer, 8 Lemoine street, Montreal, recently made a judicial abandonment of his property. He also filed a statement of his assets and liabilities at the insolvency department of the Superior Court. Mr. Clement had worked up a satisfactory trade, but the financial depression was the main reason to which the assignment was attributable.

The liabilities range between $50,000 and $60,000, while the assets consist of stock in trade, and include 5,000 dozen hats and caps, $3,500 stock of skins; Persian lamb, squirrel, otter, raccoon, seal, thibet, ermine, mink, etc.; $8,500 stock of other goods, consisting of sleigh robes, raccoon coats, mink muffs and capes, lamb and seal caps, stoles, collars, ladies' jackets in seal, lamb and raccoon. Book debts also amount to $5,460. Among the assets are fixtures, machinery, implements, right of lease of insolvent's premises, insurance policy, etc.

The principal claimants are: J. Bondreau & Son, $1,046; L. Bougeault, $1,500; Crescent Hat Works, $3,000; A. E. Clement estate, $1,100; Cinq.-Mars & Cherrier, $1,300; E. Delamothe, $2,000; Dean & Duncan, $2,000; J. E. Dion, $600; J. O. Godin, $1,000; Etablissment Kampman, of Espinal, France, $806; Levy & Sons, Ltd., $1,047; Charles Mignault, $3,675; McComber & Cummings, $1,250; Quebec Bank, $3,000; Revillon Bros., Ltd., $2,628; Basile Sauve, $1,000; H. J. Trihey, $1,800; A. Vogel & Co., $3,995; Vinet Clovis, $1,060; Dame R. Valois, $1,000; H. Wolfe & Co., $2,219; bills payable, $1,000.

FAILURE OF A. M. RUTENBURG & CO.

With total liabilities of about $80,000, Max Rutenberg and Chas. J. Gordon, carrying on business at 507 St. Paul street, Montreal, as wholesale furriers, under the style of A. M. Rutenberg & Co., have made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors.

Max Rutenberg was established in the wholesale fur business by his father, H,, Rutenberg, of the firm of Aronson & Rutenberg, pawn brokers, Montreal, four years ago, and about a year and a half ago Chas. J. Gordon, who is the brother-in-law of Max Rutenberg, became the latter's partner. The assets are estimated by the liquidators at about $20,000, but so far this feature of the failure has not been accurately determined.

The liquidation was affected at the request of Alexander Burnett, accountant, whose claim amounts to $327. According to the statement filed at the insolvency department of the Superior Court, the direct liabilities amount to about $47,000, and the indirect to $35,000. The assets consist of stock in trade, machinery, store and office furniture and fixtures, book debts and equity in goods to Levitt Bros.

The principal claimants are: A. Vogel & Co., $12,789; Revillon Bros., Ltd., $10,514; A. E. Pierce, $6,295; British Canadian Fur Co., $4,858; Aronson & Rutenberg, $1,745; Hiram Johnson, $1,487; M. Vineberg & Co., $1,350; Jacob J. Archer, $1,247; C. Pierce & Co., $1,156; H. R. Gutheil, $955; Heillig, Joseph & Co., $949. All of above firms are of Montreal. The secured claims are: Eastern Townships Bank, $30,000, and that of Levitt Bros.

The firm had been in financial difficulties for some months, and was obliged to dispose of a large quantity of furs at exceedingly low prices.

Mr. Rutenberg, Sr., was regarded as one of the wealthiest Jewish business men in Montreal, died a short time ago.

At a meeting of creditors, held Friday, November 22, an offer of 25 cents on the dollar on behalf of the estate was made. The creditors, however, would not agree to a settlement on this basis, and as a result another meeting has been called, when it is expected that a settlement will be effected.

Knitted Goods

Jackets and Sweaters

The introduction of Novelties in this line has made for extra trade--Advice given to push fancy knitted goods during the next few weeks.

Now that the manufacturers have something that is really new to offer, there has been a revival of interest in jackets and sweaters and those merchants who have stocked and shown them have done exceedingly well with these goods. The jacket and coat styles have been the better sellers, and not only are men wearing them, but there has been a considerable sale to women as well.

Grey is the color chiefly in demand but empire green has also been taken. Now that the season for skating and kindred sports is at hand, these goods should be pushed. They would make exceedingly acceptable Christmas gifts and might be featured as such. All kinds of fancy knitted goods, bed slippers, shawls, infants' jackets, bootees, etc., should all be brought out strongly at this season.

Spring Trade Good

In Knitted Goods prospects for new season are satisfactory--Selling at retail for Fall of 1908 not general yet—Mills sold up.

Though there is nothing like a rush, a very steady and satisfactory business in knitted goods is passing over the counter in the retail stores. The weather is not ideal for the quick sale of heavy underwear, but merchants are moving goods fairly well and without the aid of any extra price reductions. The first spell of seasonable weather will certainly improve business in this section, as there are always many persons who do not buy until conditions force them, and as yet there has been no weather sharp enough to make buying imperative.

Possibly it is as well that the weather has not been such as to force sales, since the mills are sold up to, and in many cases away above the limit of their capacity and any extra demand at the present time would reveal these deficiencies. There are plenty of goods on order, but they are coming to hand comparatively slowly, though since the initial deliveries were completed the repeat orders sent in have received fairly prompt attention. This has been because though the stream has been steady the individual orders were not of great size. The total, however, has been respectable.

The retail trade was in fairly good condition to take Spring goods, as stocks were well cleared up, in most localities, at the end of the Summer season. Business on the road, in Spring lines, has been good, and orders are still coming in. As a general rule the volume of business promises to be fully up to, if not over, that of last year.

The new Fall samples for the coming year are usually to hand about the present time. Speaking generally, it is expected sample lines will be later than usual, one of the reasons being that buyers are not, from a variety of causes, ready to place orders yet. The price situation is also said to be somewhat uncertain.

In the lines now selling for the coming Spring, the tendency for lighter weight goods is very marked. This call for light weights was only a few seasons ago confined to the larger centres, but now even the smaller towns are buying light weight garments.

There is a call also for men's sleeveless garments and in knee length. These garments were looked upon as a fad when first introduced, but are now coming into more general wear.

Hosiery

Hosiery an attractive Christmas line--Better qualities and deliveries promised in the coming Spring.

Fancy hosiery is being largely exploited for the holiday trade. Not for many years has this department enjoyed such an opportunity to make good for the Christmas season. Hosiery has always been regarded as a useful and desirable present, but this year it makes as well a dainty and attractive one.

Fancy lace stitch and embroidered hose are done up in dainty boxes. The more expensive ones are of silk, but highly desirable goods in lisles, etc., are shown. These goods make not only an attractive window display, but show up to good advantage in the department.

Merchants will be glad to learn that it is easier to get deliveries and that there is a fair promise of a satisfactory supply of goods during the coming season. Prices are still firm, and on a high level, but qualities are said to be better than they have been for some time. This improvement, however, is not so great as to retire the 35c. hose from its prominent position in the women's department.

Tans and blues are expected to be in good demand in both women's and men's hose. Blues are being taken by the ultra trade and there is also some call for grey and purple.

White, for the Summer season, for the women's and children's trade, promises to be the strong seller, the wearing of white, or light colored hose, with a black shoe being an established fashion now. Footwear to match the gown is still in vogue, and the position of fancy footwear promises to be a strong one for the coming Summer.

Western Freight Rates

New Tariff Proposed Objected to by Winnipeg Wholesalers—Railway Commission Takes Action in the Matter.

A new railway freight tariff for Western Canada has been prepared by the railways and it was proposed to bring it into effect on November 25. In view, however, of the strong objection taken to it by the Winnipeg Board of Trade and Jobbers' Union, the Railway Commission decided that the new tariff should not become effective until that body had an opportunity of considering the objections which were raised to it, particularly by the Winnipeg shippers. The claim is made by the Board of Trade and the Jobbers' Union that the new tariff, as proposed, is a menace to the wholesale trade of that city, since it gives to the eastern wholesalers a decided advantage over those in Winnipeg. The rates from Winnipeg to the greater number of points in Manitoba have been increased on all classes, this increase, in some cases, being seventy-six per cent. over those prevailing under the old tariff. To points farther west, and in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta the rates are reduced slightly.

One of the radical changes effected by the new regulation is that the traders' tariff has been abolished, the same rates applying to all classes of shippers. The railways explain that the reason for the abolition of this traders' tariff is the fact that Judge Killam, Chairman of the Railway Commission, has given it as his opinion that it was illegal because of its discriminatory character.

A protest endorsed by the Jobbers' and Shippers' Association and Board of Trade against the new rates, and asking that they be held until February 15 before being brought into effect, was forwarded to the Railway Commissioners, and the request was granted to the extent that the tariff would not become effective until consideration had been given to it, with the objections in view.

WESTERN POSTAL SERVICE.

Complaints of inadequate and inefficient postal service in Western Canada are more numerous than ever, and, apparently, the Post Office Department does not yet realize the gravity of the situation. These complaints are loudest perhaps from the newer districts, but even in the older towns, along the main line of the C.P.R., there are constant complaints, and a little investigation or a little actual experience, will show that these complaints are well founded. The department at Ottawa is so far removed from the scene of the trouble that the officials do not understand the situation, and they fail to realize that special attention is required to ensure an adequate service in the newer Canada that is so rapidly springing up in the country west of the Great Lakes. Western business men say that there will be no permanent relief until another deputy minister is appointed, who will be given a free hand in the opening of new offices in the new towns and in making radical and sweeping changes in the method of handling the mails in some districts. There is no sympathy in the West with a policy which piles up a surplus each year, while the service is becoming more unsatisfactory every day. The slow workings of a red tape official system compel new towns to wait weeks and months before new post offices are opened, and the meagre salaries paid the postmasters are responsible for the fact that the service is miserably inefficient in all parts of the West. Officials cannot be expected to do more than they are paid for.

THE CANADIAN BANKING SYSTEM.

"Editor The Dry Goods Review.—A customer of mine returned from the city and informed me that a leading merchant there claimed that the U.S. banking system was superior to ours. His reason for so thinking is that the local national bank at each point is directly interested in assisting and maintaining business in its own community. Here a few presidents and general managers hold up the whole country. Now this man whom I refer to does not want banks to uphold booms or bolster up financial weakness. Responsible men can only occasionally, though offering good security, get assistance. It hurts business. For ourselves, we deal largely with farmers. We are not rich, and it looks to us, from the way the banks are acting, that we will have to tell good farmers, who have always paid us, that we cannot carry them for six months as formerly, but will have to get down to credit of a month or two months, and that in an agricultural community means a considerable curtailment of business."

The above was written by one of our readers who has felt the pinch of the tight money situation. He is not alone in criticism of the banks. Credits have been cut down everywhere and merchants have found difficulty in financing their businesses. In many cases their complaints have undoubtedly been justified, but those who go so far as to say that the United States' banking system is superior to ours are entirely mistaken. The great merit of our system lies in its elasticity—in its ability to quickly collect large sums of money at points where they are most needed. At a time like the present the concentration of funds in the west, for the purpose of moving the crop, might naturally be expected to work hardship on many business houses. The situation will just have to right itself, and among the most important results of this process will be a nearer approach all through the country to the cash basis.

DECEMBER AND COLLECTIONS.

While it is natural that with the near approach of the holiday season, the ambition of the merchant should be to increase the volume of the trade incidental to that season, and that his energies should be directed to the accomplishment of that object, possibly to the partial neglect of others, it may be pointed out that there are other considerations to which he should give careful thought. One of these is the question of collections, and The Review cannot too strongly impress the merchants with the importance of this feature.

There is abundant ground for the belief that, while the crops in Ontario this year were deficient in volume, compared with those of last year, the increased price—and it is a somewhat significant fact that practically every farm product has shared in the increase—will bring the farmers as much money as they received for their crop in 1906.

This fact should be taken advantage of, and wherever possible, collections should be made. Farmers have money in the banks, and, many of them, doubtless, are content to allow it to remain here, drawing three to four per cent. interest, and let the merchant wait, if he is willing to do so.

Conditions at the present time will not permit this. It is an acknowledged fact that in the mercantile world money is scarce, and it will only be by the concerted action of the merchants generally in pressing their collections, and, in turn, meeting their obligations promptly that satisfactory results can be secured.

The wise merchant—the one who looks ahead and who grasps the salient features of the situation—and prompt collections is one of them—will have anticipated this advice and will have taken such steps as he may deem advisable, having in view the considerations peculiar to his particular trade.

No specific mode of procedure can be outlined here. Every merchant knows best the methods which have produced the best results in his case, and will, no doubt, adopt them. All that can be done is to urge the necessity—and the reasonableness—of careful attention to collections during the last month in the year. It will be easier to make them this month, than next year, and the situation demands it

AN EDITOR WITH BACKBONE.

It isn't always that a daily paper has the courage to stand up against a big advertiser and insist that he must not attempt to interfere with the news and editorial departments of the paper. In fact it is charged, and the charge seems to have substantial foundation, that the daily press in the big Canadian cities dare not publish news items or make editorial comments which would be distasteful to the management of the big department stores. However that may be, there is at least one editor of a big paper who refuses to submit to dictation from an advertiser.

It was some months ago when one day, shortly before the evening edition of a certain city daily went to press, the telephone rang and a reporter answered it.

"This is Mr. Dash of Blank's speaking. We have had an accident in our building and a couple of men are badly hurt. Now we don't want one line of this to appear in the paper."

The reporter was a new man and he didn't want to take any responsibility, especially as he knew that Dash was the manager of the big department store. So he brought his chief to the telephone.

Mr. Dash repeated his demand to the editor-in-chief.

"What's this?" replied the editor. "You know we are running a newspaper, don't you?"

"I don't care about that," was the reply. "This is Mr. Dash of Blank's speaking, and I insist that I don't want a line in your paper about this accident."

"We are running a newspaper and this accident is news," was the reply. "We are going to publish it of course. If you have any suggestions to make as to the way you want the story told we'll be glad to hear them, but we are going to publish the story."

"Look here, young man," was the irate reply. "I don't know who you are, but I want you to know that I am Mr. Dash of Blank's, and if one line of this accident goes in the paper your people will hear about it when they come around for a renewal of their advertising contract."

"I don't care whether it is Mr. Dash of Blank's that is speaking, or the Emperor William of Germany," was the reply. "We are publishing a newspaper and we are going to print the story. What's more, when the time comes to renew the advertising you will find that Blank's will need their advertisement in this paper more than this paper will need Blank's advertising."

That was all. The story was published and the advertising was not cancelled.

SPRING SPECIAL NEXT MONTH.

The Review's next issue will be the big Spring Special, and it is going to surpass in every respect any similar number that we have ever turned out. That is in accordance with the progressive policy which we have determined to maintain. There will be many special features, and every one of them will be of a thoroughly practical nature. Besides this the regular departments will be more than usually interesting.

In July we compared catalogue prices on a number of lines with those charged by local merchants. In this issue we will show the disparity between prices charged by retailers in the east and in the west.

The leading writers of ads. for Canadian retail stores will write of their methods. This should prove a strong feature.

Many of the best stores in the country will be illustrated.

Without going into further details, we may assure our readers that we will enter upon the year 1908 with many new ambitions and that these will be reflected in the January Special.

The Review wishes its readers a Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

Mid-Season Millinery

The City Trade Showing Dress Hats—Travellers out with Staple Lines for Spring—Satin coming into prominence.

The Fall season of 1907 is drawing to a close, and efforts are being turned towards the reduction of millinery stocks. In the wholesale trade Spring ideas are beginning to shadow forth, but hardly in such a shape as yet except to indicate probabilities. Staple lines are in the hands of the travelers and buying has already begun. In the retail stores the usual clearing efforts are being made. On some lines, however, the selling is not over. In the larger centres the beginning of the social season means that orders are coming in for handsome millinery creations and openings of this class of hat are now being held. This is a very profitable line, as the millinery required is handsome and high-priced. To the popular end of the trade this class of millinery is of interest because many of the novelties featured will influence Spring lines.

The felt hat of the early season has given way to the made hat, though the velvet and silk hat is extensively shown, the satin hat is the dress hat par excellence. As satin is coming into vogue so late in the season, this probably points to its more extensive use next Spring. Velvet is now being used more for trimming purposes. Velvet bindings are much in evidence, while the use of a velvet facing is growing.

There is a free return to the use of tulles and dress nets, while lace is also much in evidence, the use of both black and dyed Chantilly being the latest. Ribbons are as highly regarded as ever, and handsome ostrich is very extensively used.

Flowers and fruit, particularly grapes and foliage are much to the fore on this class of hat—indeed, at times they are all combined. The blooms used are large velvet ones and here roses more than hold their own. Shapes as a general rule are large, though a number of medium-sized hats are shown.

Hats for Spring

Smaller Shapes probable for the early trade—The passing of the Mushroom.

For the early trade in the coming Spring most probably a smaller hat will be chosen. Though the large hat is certainly most worn, there is evinced a more than passing interest in smaller shapes. These new shapes really are of fair size, only they are smaller by comparison with the very large shapes that are now so generally worn. This tendency has been eagerly taken up by the makers of ready-to-wear lines, as they realize there is not much chance for success, when the large hat dominates. It is certain, however, that the large hat will again be the fashionable headwear for the Summer season.

The mushroom shape does not give much promise of holding over into Spring, and even in modified styles it is recognized that its day, which has been a long one, is over. Already brims are straightening out and bending upwards. With the straighter brim has come the high crown, and already high crowns are being well received and are much in evidence.

The Color Question

The present tendency for Blues and soft Pink--The White Hat also en evidence.

Blue is shown in abundance at the present moment. Medium shades of fancy blues and ciel are much worn. Pink is also a good seller and there is some interest taken in the white hat. Large black hats generally have a facing of either light blue or white velvet. Yellow is in high favor with the extreme trade—soft old-golds and apricot being the leaders.

The newest blue shade is a bluish-green shade, known to the trade as drakes-neck. Purple for the moment is in eclipse, but a revival in the early Spring is looked for when the violet season arrives. Greens are especially good, the Empire shades being one of the best trimming colors. Soft rose and wine shades are well taken.

Costly Ostrich

Ostrich in high favor--Prices high, and wings and mixed feathers particularly coque in great favor.

There is something like a rage for ostrich plumes and prices rule high. Not for many years has so much ostrich been worn, and there is every reason to expect its continuance over the coming season. Should this be so those in the know anticipate further advances in the near future. Should the heavy demand continue there is no chance of prices becoming easier as stocks are much depleted. Advices from abroad say that "where once heavy stocks were carried now there are next to none, and what is more significant, the commonest qualities are advancing as rapidly as the better qualities. This rise in price is not confined to ostrich alone, but practically all types of feathers have advanced in price."

Moving Into New Quarters!

Sometime during December we shall move into a handsome new building (100 Wellington St. West), erected to meet our requirements and thoroughly adapted to millinery uses. That means more room and better facilities, and shows on the surface that the business is growing. Success of this sort isn't a mere happen-so, and the fact of larger and more pretentious quarters tells better than anything else our standing with the trade.

1907 with us has been the best of years, and the new building gives promise of bigger and better things for 1908.

New York Mode

New Styles Seen at the Horse Show and Metropolitan Opera—Heavily Trimmed Hats in Vogue—Cophenhagen Blue Popular in Dress Materials.

New York, Nov. 22.—The week beginning Nov. 18 was a notable one for New York, since with that week came the Horse Show and the opening of the Metropolitan Opera House, two events which are of vast importance, since they mark the opening of the social season in this city. Both events are interesting from the sartorial standpoint ; here speculation ends and one can state with absolute certainty what is or is not correct, for here society congregates, dressed in its very best, and behold the die is cast and the fashion or fabric made or marred.

It is, of course, but natural that the Horse Show is of greater value, since to the Garden women wear hats, furs and wraps, while to the opera apparently one wears just as little as possible in the way of clothes and makes up for the deficiency with jewels !

The general opinion appears to be that the Horse Show was not as brilliant an affair as formerly, but be that as it may, it was none the less a dazzling spectacle and a veritable guide book of fashions. In spite of the fact that the great range of fabrics, colors and designs in fashion might give leeway for individuality, a great sameness in general effect was notably apparent. This remark is particularly true of the millinery worn. Such tremendous, heavily laden hats as they all were, with but a few exceptions, and how few women really carried them off with anything like the grande air ! Velvet and satin in combinations and alone, prevailed, with a goodly showing of fur hats. Black, petunia, Copenhagen blue, dahlia and empire green were the colors chosen for the majority of the hats, with petunia probably in the lead. While quantities of ostrich were worn, it was quite conspicuously outrivalled by paradise feathers. Practically all the ostrich plumes were of the mellon variety and they were magnificent in length, breadth and thickness, falling to the shoulder in almost every instance.

Paradise, dyed to match the hat or gown, as well as in its natural colorings, was, however, the favored trimming of the wealthiest women. Fancy feathers of all descriptions were noted and large wings, especially ibis wings, were in favor. Ribbons and flowers were well represented, morning glories and orchids, two novelties of the season, being conspicuous in the boxes, as well as large roses.

Veils were a very important consideration ; lace veils three yards long envelope the entire hat and cover the faces as well. Dress nets, particularly blond, are the latest veiling fad. These are ribbon or lace edged and are usually the color of the hat. Fine mesh veils seem to be quite relegated to the background and in their place are veils of startling design and size, for it is now no longer correct to have one's veil simply cover the face, it must enmesh practically the entire hat, no matter how large that hat may be. This fashion may in a measure account for bringing dress nets into requisition for veiling purposes as regular veiling nets have not hitherto been of the desired width. New York women at present are simply swathed in yards of net ; it covers face and hat and is pinned tightly at the nape of the neck, the ends then hanging to the shoulders or waist, as desired. It is certainly a picturesque mode and one that adds greatly to the becomingness of the huge hats one must now affect to be at all smart. An unveiled woman is almost a curiosity in the streets at the time of writing. One or more ribbon bands are used on the veils, a taffeta ribbon being usually chosen, and do not forget that it is smart to have the veil match the hat, or at least carry out the color scheme of the entire toilette.

A salient feature, which I have previously mentioned, is that there is a notable absence of all underbrim decorations. Bandeaux are unadorned and unconspicuous, and where once unsightly angles and spaces were filled out with ribbon loops, now puffs, curls and braids are required.

Theatre goers have now another grievance, for while they now have no hats in front to obstruct the view, they have formidable looking coiffures, both wide and high, which are much, much worse than hats, since they cannot, at the play at least, be removed. And as if to add insult to injury, it is now the fad to braid ribbon, or velvet twists, in and out of the hair, just as one would run a ribbon through a beading, and then finish the arrangement with a wide Alstian bow. The effect is quaint and decidedly youthful, and is another demand for the ribbon manufacturer to gloat over.

To return for a brief minute to the question of millinery, I would like to state that while many of the fashionables wore huge hats with slightly drooping brim, the mushroom appears to have reached, or even passed, its zenith, and the straighter trim hat to have come into its own again. Many of the hats roll at the side, nearly all droop at the back and are much wider at one side at least and in the back, than in the front. A revival of the large flat-brimmed sailor shape, wider at the left side than either front or back, is practically a certainty.

Now as to the dresses; Copenhagen blue is undoubtedly in the lead for color, with browns and yellows following. Velvet and soft clinging fabrics, such as crepes, chiffons, marquisette and kindred stuffs, prevail for dressy gowns, with broadcloths for the tailor-mades, if one can so designate the elaborate creations now worn. Pleated skirts have given way, in the heavier materials, to many-gored plain skirts, which cling and are once more entrain The smartest women have taken up the short backed coat with kimona sleeves, a shapeless garment with little but newness to recommend it. Much embroidery and braiding appears on these coats and not infrequently the outline of the coat is followed with a band of braid. Rolled collars have given way to peculiarly shaped high pleated collars of silk or velvet. All collars, by the way, are extremely high, the featherbone reaching behind the ears to an astonishing length on even the simplest waists. The object and aim of the woman who would be smart is to appear as tall as possible, every long line adds to and enhances that effect, and as street costumes are almost invariably of striped material, the effect is further intensified.

Mention must be made of the exquisitely dainty fashion now in vogue of wearing full lace, or lace and lawn jabots, with the street suit. Embroidered linen collars, while stiff, are nevertheless charming accessories.

Observations of the women at the Horse Show have rather crowded out the impressions I received of their evening toilettes at the Metropolitan. In the boxes were many elegant black gowns, velvet, satin and spangled net. Among the colored gowns, none were as numerous or pleasing as the apricot and yellow shades, the season's latest evening shades. Chiffon with wide satin stripes, clinging satins and heavily embroidered and spangled nets were prominent. Filet lace was extensively used and filet nets in darned or embroidered effects threads of gold and silver being prominent in the design. Beautiful gold laces, in bands or medallion effects were employed with excellent results. Saffron yellow and apricot shades for artificial light and Copenhagen blue for daylight were worn, and could a better choice of color be made by Dame Fashion for the present season of luxurious and picturesque apparel?

But for millinery purposes the petunia shades must not be overlooked. The hats selected for illustration were all imported and designed expressly for the Horse Show. The first model was developed in apricot, satin-faced, and draped with velvet and bands of fur. Two willon plumes were introduced well toward the back.

The next model shows the newest in an all fur model, trimmed with feather pom pom, and the third model is in Copenhagen blue velvet, trimmed with satin and a fancy feather wreath of ostrich and marabout.

NELLIE GUNN McCLELLAND.

JAPAN SILK CROP INCREASED.

In a recent report from Alex. MacLean, Canadian Trade Commissioner to Japan, reference is made to the increase in the silk crop of that country. Mr. MacLean states that according to the report of the Agricultural and Commercial Department, the estimate of silk worm for the summer season shows an increase of 15.2 per cent. as compared with the output of the corresponding season last year, while the estimate for this autumn season stands at about an increase of 8.6 per cent. compared with the output of the previous year. Though the somewhat untoward weather and incidental floods in August and September have proved unfavorable, the crop of cocoons through summer and autumn is estimated at an increase of 11.4 per cent. compared with the total yield of last year.

Paris Fashions

Paris, France, December 1.—Fading flowers and falling leaves remind one of the actual season and though the Parisians have not as yet suffered the cold, still Mother Time bids Dame Fashion to present herself, and especially is this the case in mantles. We who occupy ourselves exclusively with ladies' extravagances in fashion know well that the hour has struck and that we are in full chase. What is the extreme fashion, and who of the upper ten are taking the lead? In ladies' mantles, "la vieille mode Renaissance."

How many seasons have come and gone since that epogue of fashion had really been called in again. It is not surprising, for ladies like to link the past with the present, especially in dress. What an abundance of velvet, three-quarter coats, silk passementerie-trimmed, are being shown and worn; worn with a silk waistcoat, double-breasted or crossed over. These waistcoats are lovely, worn by a slight woman, ugly otherwise. The silks being used to make up are embroidered Japs, bordered with cloth. In some cases one sees white cloth with an embroidered stripe. Some very smart waistcoats are being shown in suede, with floral designs hand embroidered. In dresses I have seen some very remarkable models, a model in a tailor-made, very light shade havanc, the skirt at the back was a multitude of small pleats, as also the hips. The front, forming the apron, was cut on the bias, heavily embroidered with a darker shade than the cloth and laced at the bottom with narrow braidings of the same color. The jacket, half length, tight fitting, and the sleeves were bordered with a narrow braid. The edges were outlined with a very dark shade color havanc of passementerie; this jacket having no step collar, but curved off and attached with a series of passementerie frogs.

Another model is in velvet "bleu de roi" having a long train. The bottom skirt is very "vague," almost at edge is an entredeux of tulle, embroidered blue on blue, Grecian style. The corsage is exceptionally long-waisted and finishing off with a draped belt, the large revers passing over the shoulders, forms a "fichu Marie Antoinette" crossing over in front, held together by two buttons in crystal and gold. The back has an empiecement in "mousseline de soie," very narrowly pleated and studded with "petits noeudo" of velvet. Tailor-made gowns for morning wear are more than ever the order of the day, the tailor reigning this season, and he that has a "chic" model, handsomely trimmed, has many calls. Suede waistcoats are a necessity to harmonize with an over-trimmed walking gown. Another good model is a jacket forming a gents' smoking; the roll collar is in black gros-grain, and the coat in velvet, worn with a lingerie chemisette in old cream trimmed with a venetian embroidery, the skirt quite plain with a long train trimmed at bottom with three rows of two inch braid.

There seems every indication that two distinct colors will have a turn in dresses, especially "en robe de theatre." A plain but striking costume of this order was the skirt in white cloth, very tightfitting, falling to pleat over when touching the floor, and the volume of material curving gracefully to form the train; with this was worn a black velvet, three-quarter, cutaway jacket, the roll collar in white cloth, with passementerie "a jour." The sleeves form part of front and one-half of back, the sleeves terminating well above the wrist, very wide, forming a gauntlet. The cuff is exceptionally narrow in black velvet "de'coupe" over white ground.

With this costume is worn a semi vest, interlacings of white cloth and velvet coming to point at front and buttoned with a single button of white velvet, gilt edged.

It is wonderful to see, even at this advanced season, the amount of lingerie neckwear in Chantilly, Valenciene or Guipure. I think it is safe to advance the idea that towards the spring we shall see the return of the antiquated "Dalma," modified in many ways, turned in or turned out, the fact remains. We are entering an epoch of fashion truly eccentric, so much so that the dressmaker must to-day be an artist, to claim patronage; of course be it understood the woman of fashion is always ready to pay the price.

For young ladies there seems to be great attention paid to the Stewart Clan in Scotch goods, made up principally into Norfolk blouses with a pleated skirt.

In fur coats the upper ten are wearing Breitschwanz, ermine trimmed. A smart three-quarter coat, tight-fitting with skirt, very full, is showing on the rue de la paix with an empiecement of ermine, fringed with real tails. The sleeves are very full and terminate with three cuffs, forming bands in ermine. Also a smart model of a waistcoat in a pure winter ermine, the slight tinge of yellow contrasting beautifully with the fastenings, which are turquoise buttons. The edge is bordered with a turquoise colored silk. The accompanying plates are two very smart hats that work out at high prices, but where there is real novelty, Parisians are not sparing, for the true modiste need never fear the cost price. Many an "anxious" one of the fair sex willingly pays the price to obtain something unique.

The British Markets

Business Conditions not Altogether Satisfactory — Fine Woolens Sell Higher—News Notes from England, Ireland and Scotland.

London, Nov. 28.—Business this side of the Atlantic is not as good as it should be, and it would seem as if there must be a more serious cause than the weather to explain the presence of such heavy stocks in the retailers' hands. As is usual under such conditions the wholesale trade is loudly complaining of the presence of "cold pig"—indeed, one of the trade papers is devoting considerable space, to a mutual "you are just as bad as I am" contest between the wholesale and retail trade. Buyers, it would seem, are taking advantage of every loophole to return goods.

Franco-British Exhibition.

Work is progressing rapidly on the grounds and buildings of the Franco-British Exhibition, to be held at Shepherd's Bush. The site is particularly well chosen, as it is wonderfully easy of access. It is less than 15 minutes' ride from Oxford Street and about 20 minutes from Trafalgar Square and Charing Cross. The buildings are planned on a huge scale and are to be absolutely fireproof. Besides France, and the Mother Land, the Colonies are to have special sections. Canada has secured an area of 120,000 square feet and the building, etc., is to cost about £65,000. Australia has taken 60,000 square feet, and is to spend £40,000. The Crown Colonies have taken space on a similarly extensive scale. The display of the Colonies will be arranged on both sides of the Colonial Avenue, in the form of a huge horseshoe, those of the British Empire occupying one side and those of France the other.

Quiet Silk Market.

The silk market is very quiet, partly owing to holidays, on the continent. The fall of exchange has weakened prices in the far east. Yokohama quotations show some firmness, but the actual market is very quiet. The total production of silk, in Europe, reached in the past silk year, 5,748,000 kilos.; in the Levant and Central Asia, 2,642,000 kilos., and in China, Japan and India, 12,541,000. The total output of all these countries was last year, 20,931,000 kilos. The average production for the years 1901-5 is 19,092,000, so that this year's production is 1,821,000 kilos. above the average of the past five years.

According to reports from Lyons, there is little doing in raw silk. This is not due to any falling off in manufacturing activity, but to the fact that buyers are waiting for easier prices. There is some activity on the Milan market, but offers are low and transactions few, and in Marseilles very few offers are made for dry cocoons.

Bradford.

Cable advances from Melbourne report sales in the Antipodes well attended and buying brisk. The better classes of merinos are still firm at the initial advance of 10 per cent. Medium and faulty descriptions have lost their opening improvement. Finer and medium cross-breds are also firm and are quoted at 10 per cent. and even 15 per cent. higher than opening values, but the coarser grades now rule fully 5 per cent. below the level of last season.

The slight weakness indicated has been taken in Bradford as a signal to stop buying until the situation is clearer. A lower price for wool would be very welcome here and wool buyers are waiting further developments. They are also helping to ease prices by lessening the demand. Bradford is not quite so sure of prices as it was a week ago and prefers to see the situation develop further. Now that cross-bred values are easier, efforts are being quietly made to "bear" the market still further. Importers are endeavoring to obtain the new clip upon a cheaper basis.

The prevailing high prices are restricting the use of Bradford fabrics. This season, woolen cheviots are selling well. Should the present indications of a drop in the price of cross-breds materialize, Yorkshire manufacturers will be able to supply real wool goods at a reasonable price.

Prospects for 1908 are decidedly encouraging and good orders from the home market and from America have been received for mohairs. This class of goods is an essentially Bradford make and a good season is looked for.

Manchester.

The easier tendency of raw cotton, and the financial panic in America, is causing buyers to hold back orders. Looms, therefore, are likely to stand idle, if fresh contracts are not soon booked. Buyers have no stock on hand but are wanting greater concessions than the manufacturer can allow. Quotations for cotton piece goods have not come down to anything like the present basis for raw cotton. This is owing to the influence of the spinners.

The Calico Printers' Association, by the economies it has affected, by the elimination of overlapping, by increased mechanical efficiency and by the turning out of an increased number of pieces from a reduced number of works, has greatly improved the position of the print trade, both with the Continent and the Colonies.

Belfast.

The prevailing high prices are restricting new orders for linen fabrics. Linen manufacturers are not at present in a happy position. The high prices of yarn preclude any lowering of fabric prices and because of these high prices, buyers are holding back orders. Looms are now standing because remunerative prices for goods cannot be obtained. Spinners are sold ahead for many months and are holding up prices.

The shipping business continues steady. Advices and orders from the States are variable, but in spite of all troubles, good sized orders for fancy linens, dress linens and damasks are being placed. Canada and Australia are buying freely and the continental trade is improving.

Scotch Notes.

Manufacturers receive with satisfaction the knowledge that raw cotton is falling in price. As yet spinners have not made any concession, but buyers are holding off until better rates can be obtained. The linen trade is very quiet, the weak point being the lack of demand for goods. From the border districts a slight improvement in the woolen trade is noted. New patterns for next Winter are being shown, but it is too early to say what the favored fabrics are to be. The hosiery trade is complaining of paucity of orders.

Wise Buyers Stock "The Gloves That Stay Sold"

YOUR Glove Stock is wisely bought if you have stocked the famous "J.A.P." Gloves and Mitts. Of course, if you bought last year you already know this. It's for the benefit of those who haven't yet found it out that this fact is mentioned. If you have never stocked "J.A.P." Gloves and Mitts you would be wise to see one of our 18 travellers before buying. The "J. A. P" Gloves and Mitts are made in over two thousand different styles—from the finest of ladies' gloves to the strongest and heaviest of workingmen's mitts. Every style represents the maximum of value—every seam is bound to stay sewn. The reputation of the "J.A.P." brand must be maintained at any cost. Every improvement known to glove-making will be found to be embodied in the "J.A.P." line.

Men's Furnisher and Clothier

Shirts

Blue Chambray Will be Popular in Plain Goods—Soft Tourist Shirts for Summer.

In styles of men's shirts for Summer there is but little change from those worn last season. The same neglige features will be seen. The regalia shirts, with soft reversible collars attached will be one of the strong sellers, travelers reporting a good demand for them among the trade. They come in the usual quiet colors, and the comfort which they bring to the wearer is one of their strongest recommendations. Flannel outing shirts will again be worn by their admirers.

In the lines with attached cuffs in the regular staple neglige shirt, blue chambray will be the favorite, apparently. The designs in the colored goods are unusually neat and include stripes, plaids, dots, figures and checks. The combination, silk and wool pongees, etc., are shown largely in the higher-priced goods and the prospects are that there will be an increasing popularity for these cool, comfortable goods among the best dressers.

The white goods are sold, but in decreasing quantities the more serviceable colored wear driving them into comparative oblivion, except for dress occasions, the short-bosom white shirt even having been superseded for business wear. The pleated shirt continues to hold the fancy, and, to a certain extent, takes the place of the white stiff-bosom.

The styles in collars show no material change from those which custom has made familiar.

Ready-to-Wear Garments

Clothing Trade in good condition—Browns still maintain popularity—Promises of Spring business good—High class trade increasing.

Cheery news comes from the clothing manufacturers; news which indicates that the industry is in a healthy condition. The factories are working now for Spring business, and, while in some a few men have been laid off temporarily, this is not unusual at this time of the year. If the manufacturers hold their own until the beginning of the year they will be satisfied. Stocks, particularly in the west, are very low, aod if general conditions are what they have reason to expect, manufacturers should be exceedingly busy after the New Year, working on the Spring orders. It is stated that so far as western Ontario is concerned, the orders for Spring have been ahead of those of a year ago, while in the Maritime Provinces they are about the same. There has, however, been a falling off in the west.

Browns Still Popular.

In spite of the predictions of an early decline in browns, they still maintain their popularity, and some mills are working on duplicate orders for the trade. During November, however, a diminution in the trade in these mixtures was noticed. In the lines being shown for outing goods in 1908 brownish shades are prominent, and the situation at present seems to warrant the belief that they will also be staple until Easter in any event. Merchants will do well, however, to work off as much stock as possible with the approach of Spring.

The lengths of model sack coats will be 30, 30½ and 31 inches, with three buttons, and they will round more sharply at the bottom. Both broad and narrow lapels are featured by different makers, while another has them short and deep. It can be seen, therefore, that considerable latitude is allowed.

The natural shoulder again comes into its own, replacing the square padded shoulder. A loosely draped coat is worn by conservative dressers in preference to the form-fitting and flared garment.

High-class Goods in Demand.

A gratifying feature of the trade is the increasing demand for goods of the better class, and in this respect the trade in custom work is being invaded to a considerable extent. The great majority of merchants who handle ready-to-wear clothing are demanding an increasingly high standard, both as to the material and in smartness of model, and fitting qualities to cater to the trade, which is becoming more and more of the better class.

The merchants who have made the greatest success of this department of their business are those who develop the high-class feature, and go after the young men's trade especially.

It has been found that the older trade will invariably follow the lead of the young men, and that it is good business to make the store popular with the younger element.

TYROLEAN HATS POPULAR.

King Edward has adopted the practice of wearing green Tyrolean hats, and immediately a great demand has sprung up for them in England, and in France, as well. A point to be remembered in buying these hats is that they must be the correct shade of green, and the bow must be at the back, since this is the distinguishing feature of the Tyrolean hat.

Hats and Caps

No Radical Change Anticipated for Spring—The Popularity of Crush Hats—Future Prospects Good—The Cap Situation.

The telescope hats, which a year ago were represented as among the most popular, are still sufficiently in favor to be reckoned with in a reference to the representative headwear creations of the season. In hats, generally, there is an active market, both in wholesale and retail circles, and the feeling of the trade may be conservatively described as satisfactory.

The black stiff derby shapes, of course, retain their hold upon the majority of men, and in the different modifications of shape are largely sold. Soft hats in black and colors, the latter in contrasting shades are shown. In colored crush hats the predominating body colors are light brown, pearl, nutria and tan, while the bands and edges are, of course, in shades which harmonize.

The Spring Situation.

So far as can be determined at this writing, nothing radical will be introduced in hats for Spring selling. Considerable scope, so far as the width of the brim and height of crown are concerned, will be exercised, and the customer will have the privilege of selecting a hat which in these respects is becoming, in his estimation, without violating fashion's decrees, or running the risk of being considered eccentric. The effect of this, of course, is that the retailer will be obliged to carry a greater variety than if the styles were more restricted.

Orders for Spring are, it is reported, being booked in fairly satisfactory quantities, the feeling in the trade being that conditions warrant the assumption that the retail demand will be up to that of last Spring, and buying is, generally speaking, being done on this basis.

Caps Are Popular.

The increasing popularity of the cloth cap is a feature of the trade. Recently some new cap manufacturers have entered the field, attracted, doubtless, by the rapidly increasing use of this article of headwear. In these goods, too, the tendency is towards a better class of material, and, consequently, a better price. A wide range in fabrics and styles is shown, the most popular materials being kerseys worsteds, cassimeres, serges, corduroys, meltons, cheviots and silks. The price range is as wide as the materials, a decreasing demand, however, as recorded above, being experienced in the cheaper classes of goods.

In the stores in the smaller places and to a less extent in the city stores, cloth caps for winter, with ear-tabs and rear storm-pieces, are being shown at this particular season, and with many it is believed they will be popular.

Neckwear News

Good Demand for High-Class Holiday Goods—Some of the Popular Colors—Green in the Lead—The Spring Prospects.

The dominating influence which browns exercise over men's wearing apparel extends to his neckwear, and this color, which has held sway possibly longer than any in recent years, still continues to be popular with the trade. One of its chief claims to popularity is the fact that it harmonizes well with most colors, and by reason of this is worn by conservative, artistic dressers. Browns and greens have recently been selling most largely and at the present time the latter is generally considered as the leader. Green is shown in grounds and contrasting colors, the self stripes and satin stripes making it more popular with conservative dressers than in solid colors, on account of its pronounced character.

Manufacturers Busy.

So far as the manufacturers are concerned the demand for holiday neckwear, chiefly of the better class, has been excellent, and, judging by the orders placed, the majority of them filled, men's neckwear will form an important feature of the holiday trade in the majority of the stores. The prices for the holiday goods are, of course, higher than those popularly prevailing, and there is a disposition to buy goods around seventy-five cents and a dollar, the more expensive ties being shown in decorated boxes.

The Holiday Goods.

In Christmas neckwear considerable latitude in colors is of course allowed, and the lighter goods appear to have the call. The cross, bar and stripe designs seem to be popular in all the colorings, but they do not, by any means, exert a dominating influence over the trade in these goods, figure silks and spots continuing to be favored apparently by the conservative element, and this class is catered to in the holiday goods, which the larger general stores and men's furnishers are already featuring to encourage early buying.

Four-in-hands Dominate.

There is nothing to replace the four-in-hand, in shapes, and the truth of this statement is exemplified in the holiday selling, fully seventy-five per cent. of the lines shown being in this class, which it seems is destined to continue its supremacy for an indefinite period.

In the country districts puffs will be sold to a certain extent, and in the cities there will be a good trade in ascots. The latter, if proper care is exercised in its adjustment, make a most graceful finish to a gentleman's wardrobe.

Spring Colors.

In the Spring showings there is a bewildering wealth of color combination, with, it is true, greens predominating, but there are also combinations in browns, purples, olives tans, smoke greys, mauves, reds, salmon pinks, blues, reds and yellows.

Socks and Underwear

Clocking Work Will be Seen in Footwear for Summer—New Short Sleeve Shirts and Knickers Popular.

Green and grey are the best selling colors in socks for the Spring trade, and the open clocking work will be seen in the greater number, the silk stripe still being retained. The tendency is towards modest color combinations and the popular staple colors in the lisle and cotton goods will be shades, green, grey, blue and tan.

The short sleeve undershirt and knee drawers in the Summer weight underwear will be much more generally worn during the coming Summer. It is but a comparatively short time since this class of goods was introduced and it has caught on wonderfully well, the demand for Spring attesting to this fact. It promises to be recognized soon as the standard for light weight underwear.

DRESS REFORM FOR MEN.

An interesting suggestion was made at a recent exhibition of dress goods held in Paris, when, in opening the function, Louis Parker made a plea for dress reform for men, advocating the wearing of colors by members of the male sex. He asserted that there was unanimity in the belief that the clothes worn by men to-day were foolish and hideous. He characterized the dress of the mere man as an eyesore, "from his horrible hat to his ghastly boots." He would like men to go back to the beautiful clothes of old—to the rich velvets, heavy brocades, snowy frills, and, above all, feathers. As a means of effecting an improvement in the appearance of men's costumes, he suggested that women should take a deeper interest in the clothes worn by the men, who had sunk, he said, to their present degraded condition sartorially because no woman ever looked twice at their costumes. He contended that woman's life would be twice as full, if, in addition to discussing her own dress, she had that of her husband to discuss, too. The specific improvements suggested by Mr. Parker were the abolition of the stove-pipe, the bowler, the frock coat, the stiff shirt front, the high collar, and the so-called evening dress—he would reform them all and give men something flowing, which would either conceal or display, as each individual case might require, men's curves, and, above all, something with colors in it.

SELL MEN'S WEAR TO WOMEN.

Capper and Capper, New York, men's wear dealers recently addressed an advertisement to women, asking them to call and inspect their display of gentlemen's cravats. The plan was such a novel one that a member of the firm was interviewed on the subject, and in explaining it and the reason for its adoption said :

"The main idea of that ad. was to get away from the ordinary and have people read it. Don't you think that the average man, knowing our house to be a men's establishment and seeing an announcement of that kind to the women, would naturally read it and 'sit up and take notice ?' We have noticed the results in the returns in our neckwear department already. Besides, quite a number of women accepted the invitation."

Carpets

Trade Conditions of the Closing Year—Tight Money Situation Largely Responsible for Careful Buying of Merchants—Jobbers Stock-taking—Rugs Selling Well.

From the opening day up to the present time, manufacturers and jobbers of carpets and rugs have done a good business and the general trade is running along fairly satisfactorily. Salesmen on the road have done especially well in rugs. Carpets have not been moving quite as actively as could have been hoped, but it is confidently expected that a good business in three-quarter goods will be booked a little later. Merchants are buying very carefully, owing to the tight money situation.

City trade at the present writing has been up to the average, owing to the fact that most merchants bought lightly during the previous year. The country merchants, however, bought fairly heavily last year, and as a consequence stocks in the country are heavy and most merchants have been buying on the hand to mouth principle. Some stores have yet to place Spring orders, delaying till late in January or early in February. These merchants expect to clear a large part of their stock on hand during the Christmas weeks.

Throughout the past few weeks stocktaking has been the order of the day. Jobbers just now are making preparations to receive new stocks for Spring business. They have taken the opportunity of selling out broken lines at clearing prices. As previously stated jobs as usual are always snapped up by enterprising merchants as they perceive the value of stocking jobs which can be advertised at low figures and sure to prove a drawing card to the store. Broken lines of carpets, rugs, oilcloths and linoleums have as usual been offered at general job prices.

The price situation remains normal with no changes during the last two months, or in other words since Spring business started. 15 to 25 per cent. is a conservative estimate of the advances over figures ruling one year ago.

In retail establishments, the general conditions of the carpet trade this Fall season have been fair. Merchants find no reason to complain, taking into consideration the fact of the tight money situation. Carpets, as a rule, run into a large amount of money, much more so than general dry goods, but taking all in all, the Fall trade has been satisfactory with most of the retailers.

In the leading stores the demand has been principally for Axminsters and Brussels. Wiltons also have been holding their own. In the cheaper goods tapestries have as usual been favorites. Conventional designs have been shown largely, as have also the staple orientals. Two-tones were, and are still, the strongest feature of the trade in three-quarter piece goods, meeting with marked favor throughout the Dominion. Two-tone carpets, for a pleasing effect, have yet to be equaled where used for either drawing rooms or bedrooms. Oriental designs as usual were prominent for halls, stairs and dining room purposes.

The principal colors ruling this Fall have been two-tone greens, chintzes and wood shades. The demand for reds and blues is away behind schedule, but these two colors are largely used in oriental carpets and the poor demand for these colors might be owing to this fact.

Oilcloths and Linoleums

Prices Advance over Figures Ruling a Year Ago—Brisk Demand for 16-4 Linoleums—Inlaid and Cork Goods are Selling Well.

Manufacturers of oilcloths and linoleums, and all jobbers who handle them, have had an exceptionally heavy season in this line for Spring. This, notwithstanding the fact that prices have advanced considerably over figures ruling one year ago. The advance over last year in Canadian oilcloths averages 3c. per yard and imported lines about 5c. per yard, from the jobber's standpoint. Linoleums run generally on the same advance.

Jobbers find a brisk demand for 16-4 linoleums. The reason given is that merchants are beginning to appreciate the cutting qualities of this width, as it cuts to much greater advantage than the narrower widths. One of the reasons why some merchants, particularly the smaller ones, have not taken to this line is the inconvenience of stocking and the awkwardness of handling. Much needed space also has been a prominent factor in the non-stocking of this width. At present all of these faults are being done away with and merchants are "making room."

Some jobbers find the demand for florals better than ever, while others state that there is very little demand for this line. Inlaids and Cork goods are selling well. In Cork linoleums, green is having preference. Large checks are also prominent in many lines.

With the retailers there is a good demand for inlaid wood effects. This line is selling well for offices, halls, and as surrounds for rugs. The demand is just as strong as ever for the ordinary tile effects. Some merchants interviewed find no demand whatever for floral designs. Block patterns are also to the fore.

ADVERTISING WALL PAPER.

The Purchaser of General Publicity is cast for a thinking part in the Advertising performance.

He is supposed to represent a "setrock" upon the landscape, a distant dot, a clump of cactus, or something else equally scenic and silent.

When he does become a principal, comes down to the footlights and starts asking plain questions as to where he's at and what he's getting, he is likely to demoralize the whole drama. Incidentally, he may also learn some enlightening and theatric truths.

When the General Publicity Advertiser begins to inquire around for results there is one solacing sop that is always ready : "Consider all the country's great Publicity Advertisers who have been long and liberally at it. It must pay them or they wouldn't keep it up !"

Wall paper, like many other things, has always been advertised in a too general form. We are certain that nine-tenths of the advertising space given to it could be utilized to a greater profit were more thought and consideration given to the possibilities that wall paper gives for really powerful pulling advertisements.

The Staple Department

Summary of Wrapperette and Flannelette Trade — Fair Attendance at Jobbers' Sales in Montreal and Toronto—Pink to be Popular Color.

The wrapperette trade has been very satisfactory throughout the Fall months, with most of the jobbers. Stocks, generally speaking, are clear of undesirable patterns. Flannelettes have sold in large quantities and there has been difficulty throughout the season in getting delivery of sufficient quantities of the wider widths to supply the demands of the trade. Stocks are low and there is every reason to believe that the retail trade will be willing to pay the very considerable advance in prices for Spring. However, willing or not, necessity will surely drive them to it.

Cotton Stocks Low.

At the wholesale pre-inventory sales held during last month there was a distinct difference noticed between this year and two or three years ago. Then cottons were frequently jobbed off at a sacrifice, now there is no stock worth talking about to sell. Stock, in cottons, was never so low as throughout the present year in the large warehouses and there are no really slow lines. Another reason why stocktaking produced fewer jobs than usual lies in the fact that the high prices asked by manufacturers for Spring business has driven jobbers to hold on to what stocks they have on hand, especially in staple lines, where patterns are not a serious consideration.

Spring Cottons Satisfactory.

Spring trade on fancy cottons, that is, prints, ginghams, etc., is opening up in a very satisfactory manner, with orders fully up to the corresponding month of last year. There is a decided tendency towards spots, which in some cloths run up to extravagant sizes. This, however, does not seem to have interfered with the popularity of checks, both corded and plain. Chambray ginghams, as usual, are holding their own.

The only remarkable thing that is particularly noticeable this season in regard to colors, is that pinks are selling in larger proportion to blues than in previous seasons.

In whites and greys jobbers are booking as freely as usual. The general feeling about the trade is to the effect that there will be difficulty in shipping Spring orders as the condition of the white and grey cotton market continues as acute as ever. Raw cotton continues scarce and high in price. Mills also are overworked. One staple buyer interviewed by The Review, on the delivery question, stated that goods ordered last March for Fall delivery had not as yet reached them, and his personal opinion is that the delivery question for Spring will not be much improved.

Up to the present the fine underwear finish in white cotton is meeting with a deserved success, as is Bengal grey cotton.

Sheetings in both white and grey cotton, continue high in price and also hard to procure. The cheap lines especially are scarce.

While denims are higher in price, the sale has not been affected to any great extent for Spring business.

A Good Demand.

The demand for tickings is good. Lines to retail at 25c. are popular. In tickings, as far as can be learned, the prices have, as everybody knows, advanced, but the qualities remain the same.

The feeling for apron ginghams is as good as ever in some localities, but in Quebec "the demand has never been better," to quote a Montreal buyer. Prices average 5 per cent. advance over figures ruling one year ago. The 40 inch width to retail at 13c. is proving popular for Spring.

Buy for Reasonable Requirements.

Many retailers this season, as in previous ones of a similar nature, where there is a feeling that prices might be easier in the late Spring, will lose far more by not buying to cover their usual requirements than they will make by being open to buy when any small drop in prices occurs. We do not at all advise speculation and extravagant buying, but we do believe that in a season of this kind more mistakes are made in the way of starving stocks than are made by paying ¼c. more for goods to come in at the beginning of the season.

Hemmed Sheets and Pillow Slips.

Successful retailers in many parts of Canada have welcomed the efforts of various manufacturers to market hemmed sheets and pillow slips. They are rapidly educating their customers to the fact that it saves time and is really an economy to buy ready-made sheets and slips. Formerly, outside of the larger cities, sheetings alone were sold, but where a keen merchant has taken up the line it has proven a success.

A good example of the profit possibilities is told of a Montreal store, which sold ready-made sheets at $2, costing $9 per dozen. Formerly 8-4 sheeting was sold at 45c., and they made an exceptionally good profit, as it cost them less than 30c. However, their argument is that they had to carry at least four widths of sheeting and several grades and each piece represented an investment of from $8 to $12. On the other hand, they could carry the various styles in ready-made sheets and slips with less investment and make a larger profit, besides pleasing their customers. Another store interviewed in this connection explained the economy from the customer's viewpoint. If a woman pays 45c. for sheeting and it takes 5 yards, the material alone is costing $2.25, while she can buy ready-made sheets at $2 and get a greater variety of border and more general satisfaction.

MONTREAL COTTON INDUSTRY.

The cotton industry is an important factor in the business of Montreal and millions of dollars are brought to that city annually through this industry. The sales of one of the largest cotton concerns last year amounted to $8,131,000, which was an increase of $1,475,000 over those of the preceding year. Two of the other large companies' sales for the year amounted to $5,701,000. Two large cotton companies are now being organized with head offices in Montreal and works in the vicinity of that city.

Handle the Threads that Pay the Profits

You must handle thread—good thread, too. But there's no reason why you should not make a good round profit on thread, as well as on silks and laces.

The thread trust is too keen on profits themselves to let the retailer make very much. But there's one independent mill in Canada that believes in giving the Merchant a square deal.

DOMINION THREADS

are made by this profit-sharing company. They are lustrous, strong, free of all imperfections and guaranteed standard strength. If you are tired of working for a foreign trust—and want to make a decent profit on threads, write for prices and a free sample spool of Dominion Threads.

A rummage sale was going on at a certain country church on the outskirts of Liverpool, and a local magnate shed the light of his countenance upon the assemblage.

Immediately upon his arrival, he was called upon to assist with the work of propping up a stall which showed imminent signs of collapsing.

He placed his shining tall hat on an adjacent stall, and went to the rescue.

Soon it was accomplished, and the magnate returned to the stall where he had left his hat.

It could not be found, and he blandly inquired of the young lady in charge as to what had become of it.

"Oh, dear me," said that young person, "was that your hat? I have just sold it for fourpence!"

"Here, young man," said the old lady, with fire in her eye, "I've brung back this thermometer ye sold me."

"What's the matter with it?" demanded the clerk.

"It ain't reliable. One time ye look at it it says one thing, and the next time it says another!"

"Say, boss," inquired a knowing young fellow from Chicago, recently at a new Western town, "have you got an hotel in this one-horse city?"

"You bet."

"A grocery man?"

"Two of 'em."

"A dry goods man?"

"Three of 'em."

"Then," exclaimed the man from the East, impatiently, "is there nothing left for me to open?"

"There is," replied his informant, as he drew a revolver from his pocket with one hand and pointed to the door with the other. "If you are not out of this in two seconds you will have a mighty good chance of opening our new cemetery!"

A young Jap asked an English firm to give him a situation, and, finding that he could speak and write English admirably, the manager agreed to let him have a trial.

Some days after the cashier summoned him, and told him to write a letter to a customer, who had owed some money to the firm for a long time, and who seemed to have no intention of paying.

"Write briefly, but politely," said the cashier, "but let him understand distinctly that we expect him to pay the money without further delay."

The Jap wrote the letter, and on the following day a cheque for the full amount due was received from the customer.

Considerably surprised, the cashier asked the Jap to give him a copy of the letter which had produced such quick effect, and here is what he read:

"Dear Sir,—If you do not send us at once the money you owe us, we shall be obliged to take steps which will cause you the utmost astonishment.—Respectfully yours," etc.

"What!" cried the genial Popkins, slapping his friend Jobson on the back, "you are in love with Maud Dawson, and too bashful to propose to her! Think shame of yourself, man! Just you follow my plan. I was out walking one night with a lady, who is now my wife, and we came to a jeweler's shop and I pointed to the engagement rings in the window and said, 'Wouldn't you like one of these?' and she said, 'Yes,' and so it was all settled."

"Capital idea!" cried the bashful Jobson. "I'll try it this very night."

Twenty-four hours later the two friends met once more.

"Well, Jobson," cried Popkins, "did the plan work?"

"Work," groaned Jobson, "I should think it did! Just listen. I took Maud along High Street and stopped at Goldstein's, the jewelers, and I pointed to the engagement rings in the window and asked her if she would like one, and she smiled and blushed and put her hand on my arm and said, 'Oh, yes, dear George. I would like that one' and 'that one' was fifteen guineas!"

DEATH OF HENRY HAMILTON, SR.

In the death of Henry Hamilton, Sr., president of the Hamilton Company, and one of the best known retail merchants of Montreal, the dry goods trade has lost one of its pioneer representatives. The deceased was in his sixty-fourth year, and his death occurred at his family residence, 132 Mansfield street, Montreal.

Ill health compelled the deceased to relinquish the active supervision of his business some time ago; his two sons, Messrs. Henry and George Hamilton, succeeding in the direction of affairs. His death was thus not unexpected.

Henry Hamilton, Sr., was born at St. Luc, Iberville county, and at an early age came to Montreal. Shortly afterwards he went into partnership with Thos. Ligget, establishing the then dry goods house of Ligget & Hamilton. After a number of years the partnership was dissolved and for four years the business was carried on under the name of Henry Hamilton only. Later, Mr. Hamilton joined forces with his brother, N. E. Hamilton, forming the firm of Henry & N. E. Hamilton. Later on the house became known by its present name, the Hamilton Company, N. E. Hamilton having died two years previous.

Apart from being a distinguished and successful business man, the late Mr. Hamilton devoted some of his spare time to politics, being a staunch Liberal. He was also a Justice of the Peace, a member of the Board of Trade, and an ex-mayor of Doriar, Que.

UNITED KINGDOM'S COTTON EXPORTS.

The exports of cotton for the past year for which figures are available, amounted to $500,000,000 from the United Kingdom, and that record will be exceeded during the present year. Compared with these figures, the exports of other cotton manufacturing countries sink into insignificance, $118,000,000 being the value of German cotton exports, $78,000,000 from France, and $53,000,000 from the United States. The imports brought to the United States during this year will exceed $75,000,000. In spite of the fact that the United States produces three-fourths of the world's cotton and has $600,000,000 invested in its cotton manufacturing establishments, it is one of the best customers the United Kingdom has in cotton goods; the raw cotton having been first brought from America, notwithstanding.

In the value of its cotton imports, the United States is the third country in the world, India and China alone exceeding it.

PRAISE FOR CANADA.

Aggressive Canadian business methods were praised recently by Thos. Burnley of Thos. Burnley & Sons, Limited, Gomersal Mills near Leeds, England. Mr. Burnley spent a little over a fortnight in Canada and The Review was fortunate in seeing him just before his departure, when his impressions of Canada were more clearly formed.

He called upon the wholesale dry goods trade, accompanied by his Canadian agents, D. M. Chorlton & Bro. and was pleased with the organization of such wholesalers as Greenshields, Brocks, Gordon Mackay, etc. He even went so far as to consider their premises and business methods ahead of similar English concerns.

This was the first visit of Mr. Burnley to Canada and he was much pleased with trade conditions and considers the future of Canada assured. He sailed from New York on the 15th of November.

Views From Various Points

SASKATOON.

Saskatoon has had a building boom this year, over a million dollars having been spent in new buildings, including dwellings, business blocks and bridges. The town has also been given a new court house and post office, while the Canadian Pacific Railway has a new station in course of erection. Many prominent business men have built residences during the year and all this goes to show that times are prosperous in the west.

Saskatoon is favorably situated on the banks of the Saskatchewan River, from which it gets its supply of water by means of a power house, which also supplies the city with electric light. This power house was finished this year and has been a step in the right direction, as many buildings which were formerly lit with oil or gas are now illuminated with electricity and supplied with water. Besides the Canadian Northern Railway, two other railways, the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Pacific are building lines through the city and it is expected that they will soon be in operation. This will mean cheaper rates and quicker deliveries.

Last year trade was hampered considerably and in many cases sales lost through the delay of goods in transit. Merchants are looking forward to the time when this will be remedied and goods can then be ordered more frequently. Most of the stores are general and some of them have recently made additions to their premises. The Great West Furniture Co. are building a store larger than the one they now occupy, while Speers & Paul, who carry a stock of dry goods and groceries, have moved into more commodious premises. J. F. Cairns has just completed a new wing to his block, and to the new section he has transferred his grocery department, with the ladies' ready-to-wear and the boots and shoes. This change has made more room for showing dry goods and hardware.

Besides the block on Second Avenue, J. F. Cairns owns a large warehouse, which is well stocked with goods of every description that his business requires. This firm has adopted a rather novel means by which to ensure a good Fall trade, gifts of no small value being offered as prizes. Every cash purchase of one dollar between now and 31st December entitles the purchaser to a coupon. A duplicate of this is placed in a sealed box, where it will remain until the specified time, when ten will be publicly drawn out, and the holders of the duplicates will receive the following gifts : First prize, team of horses, value $450 ; second prize, silver tea set ; third prize, ladies' costume ; fourth prize, suit or overcoat ; fifth prize, $20 worth of groceries ; sixth prize, dinner set or rug ; seventh prize, pair of shoes ; eighth prize, man's hat ; ninth prize, hockey outfit ; tenth prize, girl's doll outfit. Needless to say, the scheme is finding favor, the team may be seen occasionally on the streets, and any gift not found suitable may be exchanged for goods to the same value.

An important addition was made recently to the business establishments of the city, when J. V. Smith & Co. opened their semi-ready store on Second Avenue. The proprietors held a formal opening and entertained a large number of people. The building is a new one and was brilliantly lit with electric light. An orchestra was stationed in the spacious show window and discoursed music during the evening. Cigars were passed to the gentlemen and on different counters were dishes containing chocolate bon bons for the ladies. A mechanical sign announcing the opening of the store attracted a good deal of attention. A good stock of men's furnishings and boots and shoes is handled. The clothing is compactly arranged by means of the wardrobe system. Five silent salesmen containing neckwear, shirts, etc., occupy a portion of the floor, while the shelves are replete with many articles of men's apparel and footwear. The entire fixtures are of solid oak.

At present merchants are well stocked with Fall goods. Carpets, blankets, furs, and underwear, are selling well and there is a good demand for seasonable goods, as most people are preparing for the cold weather. Many good show windows are to be seen, displaying an endless variety of furs, comforters, underwear, overcoats, caps, woolen shirts, mitts, etc.

CHATHAM.

November has been a rather featureless month in the dry goods business here. Trade is reported to be up to the average, and the merchants report the outlook as good. In men's furnishings, bargain sales continue a feature.

Ald. Chas. Austin, of C. Austin & Co., has announced himself a candidate for the mayoralty for 1908, being the first in the field. He has been a member of the City Council for three years and was for the past year chairman of the Finance Committee. In his card Ald. Austin declares for rigid economy the practical cessation of pavement construction until the present debenture debt is reduced, and the encouragement of promising industries. Ald. Wm. Potter, for two years chairman of the Property Committee and well known in the grocery trade, is thus far Ald. Austin's only opponent, though there is a strong probability that Mayor W. M. Stone will run for a second term.

The capitalists from Detroit who propose to establish a shirtwaist factory here have been in the city several times during the past month, with a view to securing local capital in aid of the project. They have met with considerable success, but report that the amount subscribed so far is not quite sufficient to justify them in proceeding with the building operations.

Representatives of Irish manufacturers of fine hand worked linens recently made a special two days' display at Thomas Stone & Sons', and booked special orders.

The Lyons Tailoring Co. have been awarded the contract for supplying the police force with Winter trousers.

E. F. Mann last month opened a tailor shop in Tilbury, his present stand being in the Magee Block.

During the alteration to the Merritt Block on Fifth Street, R. G. Hoig has removed his tailoring establishmen to premises upstairs in the Scane Block, on King Street.

John Glendenning, Wallaceburg, has added to his tailoring establishment a ready-made clothing department.

H. H. Laird, Tilbury, has moved his tailoring establishment to new premises in the Stewart Block.

Wm. Berhorst, at one time a leading merchant tailor in this city, passed away recently at the home of his daughter, Mrs. (Dr.) Massicotte, in Quebec.

A new time switch has been installed in the Thornton & Douglas men's furnishing store for the purpose of turning off the window lights at a certain time.

A well attended meeting of the Board of Trade was held on Nov. 19, when Hon. R. F. Sutherland, of Windsor, Speaker of the Dominion House, delivered an interesting address on Canadian transportation problems.

L. R. Tobey of the 2 T's, has left for Hamilton, to take charge of his firm's new store in the ambitious city. His brother, Hugh Tobey, who has been for several years in the west, has joined the 2 T's' local staff.

Harry McCosh, formerly with Thornton & Douglas, has joined Masse & Co.'s staff. Garnet Bracken, also of the T. & D. store, is now with Stone & Co. G. A. Battram, formerly of Brigden, has joined the T. & D. staff.

Thos. Stone & Sons recently adopted a novel advertising scheme ; giving a free promenade concert to present and prospective customers at their establishment. Finzel's orchestra, of Detroit, was secured, and gave a good programme. Though weather conditions were most unfavorable, there was a big crowd. The occasion was taken advantage of to make a display of fine imported gownings for evening and afternoon reception wear. The display was very tastefully arranged. No sales were made, the evening being solely devoted to displaying the goods to better advantage than if the display had been interfered with by regular sales.

ST. JOHNS, N.B.

That the past year has been a most successful one in the dry goods trade is evidenced by the reports of wholesalers and retailers who have been interviewed by the correspondent of The Review. All the merchants unite in saying that 1907 has been a good year, with a large volume of business. They report that collections have been generally good, which shows that the purchasing power of the people has not been impaired. The impression prevails that the Winter is likely to show the effect of the depression in the money market, though none of the men seen are pessimistic or are looking for any great recession from a steady trade.

It is generally recognized that St. John, in common with other business centres, will have a season of quietness, that there will be a dropping off in the volume of business and some are inclined to take the view that it will be a good thing for the merchants.

The expressions of opinion from prominent manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, as given in the following may be of interest to readers of The Review.

Manager J. B. Cudlip, of the Cornwall and York cotton mills, said they were very busy at present and had been so all along. They have a large amount of orders on hand and look for a large demand for their goods from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The cotton business all over Canada is in excellent shape.

W. H. Barnaby, of M. R. A.'s, said business with them had been very satisfactory all along and he did not look for any great decline. Collections, he said, had been very good and he had no reason to expect them to be otherwise.

F. W. Roach, of Brock & Paterson, said they were well satisfied with the increase in their business during the past year, and were hopeful for the future. Payments have been promptly met and altogether the business is in a very satisfactory state.

At the London House Wholesale, T. H. Somerville reported that business had been good and so far collections had been satisfactory. He thought it would be difficult to forecast what the future would bring forth.

Scovil Bros. & Co., (Oak Hall), dealers in gents' furnishings, reported an increase in their business far in excess of any previous year, and in their wholesale department orders are booked for Spring far in advance of any previous Spring. The Oak Hall people do not look for any falling off in business, and they report collections to have been very good. Mention was made of the fact that the demand for a better grade of clothing is increasing yearly. Very little of a cheap class is now sold.

D. Magee's Sons, furriers, report business to have been about the same as last year. There was a slight falling off in September, owing to the fact that no exhibition was held this year.

The money stringency has resulted in a feeling of caution in looking after business, but the outlook is rather favorable than otherwise.

Alex. Macauley, of Macauley Bros. & Co., said they felt well satisfied with the volume of trade they had done so far.

The spirit of Christmas is already in the air, and merchants are hustling to get their establishments in shape for the crowds of busy shoppers who will be invading their stores. In many instances the showrooms are now in holiday garb, and in some places goods are being unpacked and placed on show daily. In addition to the usual line of goods, there are a number of novelties not heretofore shown.

A meeting of the creditors of Mr. Hachey, of Rogersville, was held November 15. The outside creditors represented were William Edgett, of Moncton ; London House and Vassie Co., St. John, N.B. A compromise will be sought and the creditors will meet again later.

Joseph F. Gallagher, who for a long time was P. E. Island representative of Manchester Robertson Allison, Ltd., has resigned to take a position with Brophy, Cain & Co., Montreal, dry goods men.

Jarvis Arnold, who has been nineteen years with Manchester Robertson Allison, Ltd., has severed his connection with the house to go with John Taylor & Co., of Toronto, as Maritime Provinces representative, with headquarters here.

Geo. B. Kelsey, of Toronto, representing the Goldsmiths Stock Co., died at the Royal hotel here, on November 21. The remains were sent to Toronto for interment.

The death occurred at Annapolis, N.S., on Nov. 23, of Mrs. Shannon, wife of W. J. Shannon, the well-known dry goods merchant. Mrs. Shannon was formerly Miss Henderson, of St. John, and the body was brought here for interment.

J. N. Harvey, the Union street clothier, had considerable stock damaged about the middle of November, as a result of an overflow of water from the apartments above the store. A "water damaged" sale is being conducted.

There is a possibility that the Higgins shoe factory may remove from Yarmouth, N.S., to Moncton, N.B. The matter of offering inducements in the way of a bonus of $15,000, tax exemption for a period of years, and free water, is now under consideration by the Moncton Board of Trade and City Council.

LONDON.

Dry goods, woolen, and hat and cap men captured one office and most of the directorships at the annual election of the Commercial Travelers' Mutual Benefit Society of western Ontario. J. M. Ferguson, of Finley, Smith & Co., Montreal, woolens, was chosen first vice-president, and among the directors for the year are : T. T. Mortimore, of Nesbet & Auld, Toronto, woolens ; A. Gunther, of A. Gunther & Co., London, hats and caps ; J. T. Green, of Gault Bros. & Co., Montreal, dry goods; E. R. C. Struthers, of R. C. Struthers & Co., London, dry goods; H. Henderson, of Fraser, McMillan & Co., London, hats, caps and furs; R. H. Morrison, of Forsyth, Morrison & Co., London, hats, caps and furs; W. Brown, of Jno. Marshall & Co., London, hats, caps and furs.

The retirement from business of F. H. Crabb & Co., manufacturers of pants and overalls, is announced. They were located in the new Greene-Swift building. No particular reason is given for the decision to go out of business, but it is understood the enterprise was not paying and it was decided to close it up. It was not a failure, in the general sense of the term, nor was it especially due to the present monetary stringency. All creditors' claims will be met.

Leading wholesalers report collections good. Two prominent dry goods houses state that their retail customers are meeting their notes on time, and seem to be having little difficulty in floating past the financial shoals, which some time ago were said to threaten a number of retail houses in different parts of the country.

Work on the big Smallman & Ingram building, which has been experiencing some set-backs of late, is now proceeding rapidly and it is expected that by the beginning of May the firm will be able to occupy the Richmond street section.

Another cap factory has been established in this city, by the Greene-Swift Company, under the name of the "Tip-Top Cap Company." John P. Cook, formerly of London, has returned and will be the manager.

The Helena Costume Company, of this city, has just installed a 250 horse-power engine, two large boilers, and three electric generators, to its power plant, and this, with the previous equipment, makes it one of the largest of its kind in the Dominion. C. W. Burdick, the manager, has brought the concern up to a high standard of efficiency.

Dry goods merchants, as a rule, report business brisk, despite the backward season. The mild weather has made trade in furs and many lines of gents' furnishings somewhat light, but on the whole there is little to complain of. Most of the downtown stores have their Christmas goods on display and many merchants report out-of-town orders most satisfactory. Wholesalers are receiving many large orders for Spring goods. In clothing the demand has been remarkably good, except for heavy overcoats, as yet only lighter garments being required.

Trade on the Tariff

Opinions of Representative Millinery Houses on New French Tariff--Majority want it to come into effect later.

It is the millinery importing houses that will be most affected by the proposed tariff changes on French imports. Generally speaking, it will benefit this branch of the trade, and the importers are well satisfied with the new provisions. The concensus of opinion is that when buying for next Fall takes place, there will be a general increase in buying from French sources. The chief anxiety is as to when the provisions of the treaty will come into force as the bulk of Spring importations are now either in Canada or on the way. Should the new ruling go into force before the end of the year and goods for the present season be passed at the new rates there would be some loss, but the trade will be fairly satisfied. Some lines would also benefit. Take, for instance, the case of a popular line of ribbons selling at 25 cents retail, this has, because of price advances, been reduced in quality, and if ten per cent. less duty were paid the former quality could be restored at the old price.

Should two or three months elapse before the treaty comes into force the general opinion is that the majority of the millinery houses would have to stand a loss. "Should this take place," said the representative of one large firm, "we would have to write off ten per cent. from nearly all French goods in the house. If the treaty comes into effect when stocks are full for the Spring trade price-cutting and its attendant evils are sure to result.

The majority of the importing houses are of the opinion that the opportunity should be given to the millinery houses to dispose of stocks now bought and under contract. Either goods should be entered, say from the first of the year, subject to rebate, or the provisions relating to millinery should not come into force until May or June.

When the British preference came into force the government gave it a six months' hoist to allow the trade time for re-adjustment. Provided this is done, and their interests safe-guarded, the millinery houses are fairly well satisfied with the proposed treaty, and believe that it will promote trade with France. Switzerland has, of late years, been getting the greater portion of the ribbon trade, and many houses would like to see a like arrangement made with the Swiss Government.

The following are the opinions expressed by representatives of the leading millinery firms in the city:

James M. Alexander: "The new French treaty will, on the whole, be a benefit to the trade. We buy largely from French houses. There might be, and certainly would be, some price-cutting if its provisions came into force after Spring importations were passed. We buy very largely of Swiss ribbons. If the treaty did not come into force until the Spring goods were disposed of it would prevent loss on goods now coming into the country."

P. D. Ivey, J. D. Ivey & Co.: Would certainly not like to have the treaty come into force at present as it would mean a very considerable loss to them. They buy ribbons largely of Swiss firms, as they find them more suitable than those made at St. Etienne. Certainly, millinery houses should be given time to dispose of present stock.

Debenhams, Limited: If the treaty came into force after the Spring goods had been passed it would mean simply that the trade would have to write ten per cent. off stocks for the present season. They were well satisfied with the treaty, as it would mean that they could do a popular line of ribbons at the old quality at the present price. Time certainly should be given to the trade to dispose of Spring stock or price-cutting and jobbing at reduced prices would result.

C. Marriott, G. Goulding & Sons: Did not think the treaty would make much difference, though it might have some effect upon the source of the ribbon supply. Canada bought largely from Swiss manufacturers and if the Swiss makers did not meet the tariff change, more trade likely would go to France. If the provisions of the treaty did not go into force at once it would be better for the trade if the change did not take effect until May or at the latest June. This would allow Fall samples to be priced in accordance with the change.

M. J. Cockburn, of Cockburn & Rea: Would like to see the change come at once; would suit the trade much better if the change came now instead of, say two months later.

D. McCall & Co.: Did not think the change would affect the trade very much.

Among the Travellers

Matters of Interest to the Commercial Travellers' Fraternity—Better Accommodation Wanted — Association Elect Officers.

Travellers Want Accommodation

Association asks Ontario Government to see that proper accommodation is provided in local option communities.

The commercial travelers are interested directly in the question of local option legislation, and at a recent meeting of the Commercial Travelers' Association a resolution was passed and a petition forwarded to the Provincial Government, asking that before local option legislation is allowed to pass into effect the municipality or corporation shall show that following the enforcement of the by-law, ample accommodation will be provided for man and beast. In case this is not done the petition asks the government to make such provision for accommodation as may be necessary.

It was pointed out that commercial men had suffered in many cases after local option had been adopted, and instances were cited of where it had been necessary for travelers to sleep in barns because there was no other accommodation. The handling and care of baggage is another matter which has, it is claimed, been complicated by the enforcement of local option legislation in many places.

The Commercial Travellers

Three Associations, at Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, nominate officers for the coming year--Many dry goods men honored.

The Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association held a meeting for nomination of officers for the ensuing year, in Montreal, on Saturday evening, November 9. The nominations, which are as follows, include many dry goods men.

President, R. C. Wilkins, of R. C. Wilkins & Co., Montreal; W. J. Egan, with Arthur & Co., Montreal and Glasgow; Geo. A. Mann, with J. L. Cassidy & Co., Montreal. Vice-President, J. B. Giles, with Drummond McCall Co., Montreal; Sam. T. Mathewson, of S. Mathewson's Sons, Montreal. Treasurer, Max Murdock, a drygoodsman, Montreal; S. J. Carter, of S. J. Carter & Co., Montreal, was nominated, but withdrew. Directors, to take the place of the five retiring directors, L. W. Anderson, with Greenshields, Limited, Montreal; Hugh Glassford and J. A. Dawson, with Lyman, Knox Co., Ltd., Montreal; P. M. Lemaitre, of the Salem Co., Limited, Montreal, A. O. Thibeau, with Menzie Wall Paper Co., Toronto; Charles Petrie, with Hartt & Adair Coal Co., Montreal; F. N. Picquart, S. D. Stuart and E. Duckett, with A. McDougall & Co., Woolens, Montreal.

It was decided to close the poll December 13, at 5 p.m.

In business afterwards discussed, it was decided to hold a dinner, as usual, and a dinner committee of eighteen members was present.

About seventy-five members were present and throughout the liveliest interest was shown.

The Toronto Association.

At a meeting of the Commercial Travelers' Association, held in St. George's Hall, Toronto, on Saturday evening, November 9, the officers for the coming year were nominated, Lewis A. Clearing House Certificates

New Form of Currency Adopted by United States Clearing Houses — Not Desirable as a Permanent Form.

The condition resulting from the scarcity of money in the United States has produced a new form of currency, which has been adopted, it is reported, by some of the clearing houses in the larger cities. It is known as "clearing house certificates" currency, and is issued to banks only, of course. An illustration on this page shows the form adopted. It is printed in two colors and resembles a cheque. Different denominations, from $1 up are used.

As a permanent form of currency it can hardly be accepted as desirable, one of the reasons being that it is easily counterfeited, and, in fact, since its adoption a few weeks ago bogus certificates have been successfully passed. Merchants will cash them only at a discount, and, when, say a five-dollar note is presented, the store usually demands that at least one dollar's worth of goods shall be purchased before it will be accepted.

The specimen photographed on this page was shown in Toronto by Z. E. Martin, a Canadian, who is at present living in Chicago, and is president of the Martin-Senour Company.

A Sample of the Script Money now in Circulation in the United States.

TRAVELERS' BENEFIT SOCIETY.

At a recent meeting of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Mutual Benefit Society, held in Montreal, the election of officers took place, resulting as follows : Ald. James Robinson, president; J. Hamilton Ferns, vice-president; Charles Gurd, treasurer; Reg. W. Graham, secretary. The trustees are : David Watson, Max. Murdock, J. F. L. Dubreuil; E. F. Dugan and T. J. Parkes. The society paid out in death benefits last year $17,000.

Mr. S. Jarvis, representing Abel Morall, Limited of Redditch, is leaving for Canada and will make a coast to coast journey.

Items From All Canada

ONTARIO.

R. F. Brock, woolen manufacturer, of Listowel, recently met with a painful accident, breaking an arm and several ribs.

The Commonwealth Clothing Store, with George Towne as manager, opened for business on October 30 in Port Arthur, Ont.

Hughes & Harris, merchant tailors and gents' furnishings, Orangeville, have recently moved into a new and larger store, which has been fitted up for them.

Twice within a month one of the big belts in the Canada Cotton Company's mill has been cut by an unknown vandal. Operations of the mills were delayed as a result.

Fire did $500 damage to the building in which the Imperial Hat Company did business in Toronto recently. The stock was almost a total loss, through smoke and water.

The annual meeting of the W. R. Brock Co. will be held on Monday, December 23, when the report of the directors for the past year will be presented, and directors elected for the coming year.

Campbell Brothers, who recently bought out the dry goods business of H. B. Dawson & Company, Port Arthur, have opened a number of new lines, and express themselves as pleased with the prospects.

Lipman & Dier, who have conducted a clothing and men's furnishings store in Gananoque, have dissolved partnership and the business will be continued by Robert J. Dier, his partner having decided to leave Gananoque.

The assets of Carlisle Brothers & Company, of St. Catharines, consisting of carpets, linoleums and oilcloths, upholstering goods, curtains, brass trimmings, wall papers, window shades, etc., are advertised for sale by Henry Barber, trustee.

A permit has been granted to the T. Eaton Company Ltd., to add two storeys to the new addition to the store, corner Yonge and Albert Streets. This will make it an eight storey structure. The cost of the addition is estimated at $50,000.

Mr. H. O. Cowie, who has conducted a manufacturers' agency business at 77 York Street, Toronto, with a branch at 30 Hospital Street, Montreal, has taken into partnership Mr. W. A. Cotton, and the firm name in future will be Cowie & Cotton.

Henry Owen, formerly a salesman with Anderson & Macbeth, wholesale hats and caps, Toronto, has been committed for trial on a charge of theft. It is claimed that he sold goods worth $250 for $40. In defence he stated that he believed the goods to be refused stock, which it was customary to sell at greatly reduced prices.

By the bursting of a new water tank, being filled for the first time, at the factory of George H. Hees, Son & Co., Davenport Road, Toronto, considerable damage was done to the stock, consisting of tapestry and chenille curtains, table covers, tapestry coverings, upholsterers' supplies, etc.

McMillan & Torrie, Orangeville, clothiers, have recently made several important improvements in their store, enlarging the space and providing better facilities for displaying goods. An increase in the manufacturing staff has also been made, by reason of the growth in the store's business.

A bonus of $5,000 to assist Alfred Sykes to erect and operate in Georgetown, a woolen mill, has been proposed, and the ratepayers of the town are voting on a bylaw authorizing this bonus to be given. A factory building 60 x 80 feet will be erected and not less than 30 hands will be employed.

Oak Hall, the King Street Clothing Store, in Toronto, recently celebrated its thirtieth anniversary, and Manager Coombes reports that his trade is constantly growing. This store is backed by the W. E. Sandford Manufacturing Company, Hamilton, one of the largest clothing manufacturers in the Dominion.

John McLeod, Sudbury, who eight years ago adopted the cash system in his dry goods and men's furnishings store, has found business so satisfactory that he has had to enlarge his store premises, which he has done by securing an adjoining building, and in this the dry goods and ladies' ready-to-wear department will be located.

The Ideal Clothing Company, Port Hope, is a new concern, manufacturing men's clothing, including pants, knickers, shirts and overalls. The present manufacturing capacity is one hundred dozen garments a week. A staff of sixteen operators is at present employed, but it is the intention to double that number in three months.

Because of difficulty in procuring help the clothing factory of Copley, Noyes & Randall, which has been in operation in Oakville for about a year, will be removed to Caledonia, where, because of the fact that there is no other large employer of female help, fifty girls have been secured for the start. This factory is a branch of the Hamilton establishment.

QUEBEC.

Fire in the Montreal customs house recently did damage to the extent of about $50,000, of which $40,000 was to the contents.

Henry Hecklinger, merchant tailor, Montreal, has joined Robt. Seath & Sons, with which firm his business has been merged.

C. Shea, traveler for the W. R. Brock Co., Ltd., Montreal, returned last month from a very successful trip to the Maritime Provinces.

W. R. Brock, of the W. R. Brock Co., Montreal, Toronto and Calgary, spent a few days in Montreal last month, visiting the new Montreal warehouse.

The premises of the Canadian Wadding Company, 436 Visitation Street, Montreal, were gutted by fire towards the end of last month. Damage is estimated at $20,000.

H. Palmer, foreign buyer for Debenhams (Canada) Limited, left early this month for Europe, on his usual buying trip. He will visit important centres in England and Switzerland.

E. G. Brown ,manager of the housefurnishing department, James A. Ogilvy & Sons, Montreal, is now on his semi-annual foreign buying trip. Mr. Brown will return shortly before Christmas.

A. M. Rutenberg Estate, wholesale furriers, Montreal, has assigned, with liabilities of upwards of $82,000, the largest creditor being the Eastern Townships Bank, with a claim of $30,000.

W. H. Austin, foreign buyer of fabrics and hosiery for Perrin Freres, Mark Fisher Building, Montreal, returned last month from a European buying trip. Mr. Austin visited many important markets in France, Germany and England.

Charles Tuteur, 301 St. James Street, Montreal, representing in Canada, Benedictus Weill & Company, Lyons, France, and Socite Industrielle de Celluloid, Paris, left for New York about the middle of the month. He will visit the fashion centres.

Henry Hamilton, a member of the well known Montreal firm, the Hamilton Company, and one of the mer chant princes of the eastern metropolis, died recently, in his 64th year. For many years he had been prominent in Montreal business circles.

Seizure of a shipment of furs, valued at $4,000, was made recently by U. S. Customs Collector Henry Hadd, at East Alburg, Vt., after a fight with the two men in charge of the smuggled goods. They finally decamped, leaving their booty. The furs were said to have been shipped from Montreal.

H. S. Arnold, formerly with the New York Silk Waist Mfg. Co., Montreal, severed his connection with this firm 1st of November. When seen by The Review, Mr. Arnold had no definite plans ready for publication, but his enviable connection with the trade insures him a successful future.

L. Stuffmann, of Konig & Stuffmann, Montreal, is again in the city after a six weeks' business trip in European markets. Mr. Stuffmann states European factories are well supplied with orders, and speaking of Canada he considers the future practically assured, and sees no cause for apprehension in the present situation.

Hermann H, Wolff & Co., wholesale dry goods, Montreal, are entering suit against Hon. Robt. MacKay for $17,000 for damages caused by the collapse of a water tank on the roof of their premises in August. The roof was crushed, and the goods stored in the warehouse were drenched. The defendant is the owner of the building. The indemnity claimed is to cover both actual damage occasioned by the water, as well as that incurred through the suspension of business.

THE WEST.

W. F. Kirkland, a recent arrival from Scotland, has opened a general dry goods store in Calgary, Alta., and reports business fully up to his expectations.

The Scotland Woolen Mills Company, with a factory in Winnipeg and a branch in Moose Jaw, Sask., has been reorganized, and the name changed to "The Union Tailoring Co., Limited."

W. J. Webster, who formerly conducted a woolen mill in Edmonton, Alta., but who, following four fires, which occurred in his premises, was obliged to go out of business, will, it is expected, early next year again place the mill in operation.

R. Bell, G. B. Dacker and Munro Bros., merchants in Heward, Sask., announced that commencing on November 1 they would do a strictly cash business. The refusal of the banks to advance money to wholesale houses is given as the reason for this course of action.

DRYGOODSMAN IN PUBLIC LIFE.

John Stanfield, president and manager of Stanfields, Ltd., Truro, N.S., was elected a member of the Dominion Parliament at the election held on November 28th, for the seat of Colchester. Mr. Stanfield, who is a Conservative, was elected by a majority of at least 198 over Charles Hill, the nominee of the Liberal party, and his election makes a break in the ranks of the "solid eighteen" Liberals who have represented Nova Scotia since the last general election.

Mr. Stanfield is being congratulated on his victory by his numerous friends and it is certain that he will be the recipient of a hearty ovation from the men who sit on the left of the speaker at Ottawa when he takes his seat.

Mr. Stanfield, known by reputation, at least, by all dry goods men throughout the Dominion, and also honored by all who know him for his straightforward, honest business methods, is the eldest son of the late C. E. Stanfield, who founded the firm bearing his name.

John Stanfield was born and educated in Nova Scotia and entered his father's establishment upon the completion of his education, and beginning at the bottom worked his way up to his present position. His success is due to his thorough grasp of the details of the business and his enterprise and executive ability, all of which have found ample scope for exercise.

He has always taken an active interest in the affairs of his province, county and town, and it has seemed that with the expansion of his own business, the demands of the public upon his time and interest have increased instead of diminished as is shown by his election.

UNIQUE DEPARTMENT STORE.

W. H. Scroggie, Limited, the large Montreal dry goods firm, has, according to a report from that city, bought property in the west end of the metropolis, upon which a store, embracing some unique features, will be erected. It is stated that the new building will be only one storey in height, the reason for this innovation being that the firm had found that more business was done on the first floor than on all the other floors combined. The store will, however, cover an immense area, according to the reports. The premises at present occupied by this firm have been bought by the S. Caswell Co., and will be occupied by that concern.

A CHRISTMAS TRADE SUGGESTION.

Linens as Christmas gifts may be a new idea, but it is one worth considering, and if it is taken up seriously and intelligently a good business may be done during the holidays. A pale table cloth, with a dozen nakpins put up in an attractive box would be an admirable Christmas gift. Napkins may be boxed in the same way, and a box of towels would prove an acceptable gift to almost any lady. Some retailers have developed this idea, and have found it profitable.

THREAD COMPANY'S DIVIDENDS.

A Pawtucket, R.I. despatch states that the profits of the J. and P. Coates, Limited, thread manufacturers for the year which ended June 30, amounted to $15,280,625, and that they were the largest in the history of the concern, exceeding those of the preceding year by $410,105. It added that at the annual meeting of the shareholders, which will be held at Paisley, Scotland, a dividend of 20 per cent. will be declared and an additional dividend of 10 per cent.

A DISASTROUS FIRE.

A fire entailing a loss of $100,000 occurred in Toronto on Saturday, November 9 and among the sufferers were Anderson & Macbeth, wholesale hats, with a loss of $45,000; Philips & Wrinch, fancy goods and notions, $20,000 loss; John Fisher, Son & Company, woolens, $9 000 loss; Edwin Fisher, manufacturers' agent, $5,000 loss; J. Howard Stowe, manufacturers' agent, $8,000 loss; Alcock, Haight & Westwood, $5,000 loss. The building was a five-storey structure at 76 Bay Street, and was erected since the memorable fire of 1904.

New premises have been secured and the firms affected are again doing business. Anderson & Macbeth and Philips & Wrinch are located at 25 Wellington Street west, in the Bradshaw building, while John Fisher & Son are at 162 Bay Street, room B.

New French Treaty

Ninety-eight Items now come under the Intermediate Tariff Rates--Reductions on Millinery and Dress Goods.

The Franco-Canadian treaty, the result of the visit of Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, and Hon. L. P. Brodeur, to France, during the past Summer, was brought down to parliament on November 28. In this treaty some important tariff changes are made. While under the old treaty France was given the special tariff rates on a number of French specialties, the majority of them champagnes and wines, the new treaty gives to France the benefit of the Canadian intermediate tariff on ninety-eight tariff items, and in addition to these, concessions below the intermediate tariff are granted on a number of French specialties.

Some important reductions are made in the tariff, as it relates to dry goods. Following is a list of the articles upon which changes have been made, showing the tariff under the old treaty, and that prevailing under the new agreement :

NEW WANAMAKER STORE.

The affairs of the John Wanamaker corporation have long been the subject of inquiry and discussion in business circles. All sorts of rumors were on the street and lately in the columns of commercial newspapers—only in these publications, be it noted, for the daily press was kept good through advertising patronage bestowed in full pages. Of all the street rumors the two more probable ones are the one claiming that a loan of $5,000,000 had been effected and the one claiming that the New York and Philadelphia concerns had been taken over by the Associated Merchants Co., of which John Claflin is president. To accomplish this latter case a total capitalization of $15,000,000 has to be met. It is considered safe to boil the stories down to these two points, the loan or the absorption. That the new building in New York is a failure is generally admitted, but the disposition of it is among the unsettled quantities. Claflin is credited with the bold design of taking it for his jobbing business, and a grand move it would be but we must wait awhile for authoritative information.- Dry Goods Guide.

SUCCESSFUL BASEMENT DEPARTMENT.

In Decatur, Ill., Bradley Bros. conduct a five and ten-cent basement department, and they report that "while it is not a huge money-maker, its account on the ledger show a balance on the right side." Business in this department is conducted strictly on a cash basis, this rule applying even to the customers who run accounts in the other sections of the store. It is not infrequent to lend such a customer the money to make the purchases, charging it against his regular account upstairs.

CANADIAN CORSETS IN AUSTRALIA.

In his report from Melbourne, Australia, D. H. Ross, Canadian Trade Commissioner, deals with the introduction of Canadian corsets to the Australian trade, and says:

After a determined and tactful effort made by the direct representative of a leading Canadian corset manufacturing company to introduce their goods—hitherto unknown—the line has recently been successfully introduced to Australian wholesale importers. Large initial orders are going forward by this mail to the manufacturers which reflects the excellent values offered in a line in which the competition is most marked. The satisfactory introduction of a new branch of Canadian corsets (there is at least one other Canadian make favorably known here) and the arrangements made for future business are attributable to the exceptional ability of the traveling salesman in overcoming the prejudices of conservative buyers.

Mainly About Ourselves

The efforts of the management are all directed towards the improvement of The Review. That these efforts have been successful in the past and that the progressive drygoodsmen appreciate them, has been demonstrated. But past successes, however gratifying they may be in retrospection, serve The Review but as an incentive for future achievements. A staff of editorial writers covering all subjects of interest to the dry goods trade will during the coming year join in a combined effort to strengthen The Review in its position as the brightest and most reliable trade journal in the Dominion. New departments will be added to the paper, problems affecting clerks, their relation to their employers, etc., being one of them, in addition to others of equal importance and interest.

CHRISTMAS WINDOW COMPETITION.

The value of window display, and its increasing importance to the dry goods trade are being more fully appreciated by men in the trade, and this is evidenced by the great improvement that has been made in the quality and effectiveness of Canadian window displays during the past year, especially. In view of those conditions it is but natural to find that greater interest is being taken in the Christmas Window Competition being conducted by The Review.

The prizes to be awarded are: First $15, second $12 and third $8.

Photos to be entered in the competition must reach this office on or before February 1, 1908. The only trimmers in Canada who are barred are those with Eaton's and Simpson's.

The Review expects to receive photos of many displays of merit outside of the three prize-winners. Some of these will be reproduced also, and for each one so used the sum of $5 will be paid. Each photo must be accompanied by full description of the trim.

In this issue of The Review a letter on "The Relation of the Clerk to His Employer," written by a clerk, is published. The question, which is an important one, is dealt with by him in a general way. In all probability, its perusal will suggest to clerks who may read it some specific phases of this relationship which they feel they could write on. Possibly in their own experience they have had to solve problems, the solution of which may prove of interest to other clerks. The Review will be glad to publish in the "Clerks' Department," communications on any subject of interest to salespeople. There may be some question over which you, as a clerk, have been perplexed. Tell the other clerks about it through The Review. They may be able to help you.

A trade newspaper, like any other newspaper, only finds favor in the eyes of its advertisers as it produces results directly in sales or indirectly in publicity amongst a desired clientele. The Dry Goods Review has a circulation covering all parts of the Dominion, but how often do its readers when writing for goods they see advertised, mention that they were induced to do so by the advertisement they saw in the paper? Undoubtedly there are a good many who do, and The Review would be grateful if those who do not would get the habit of doing this little favor for us.

* * *

Every reader of The Review occasionally comes across something which would make an item of news. It may be a device in storekeeping, a striking window display or a personal item about a traveler or someone in the trade, a clerk or an employer. Keep those things in mind and when the news materializes, drop a line to The Review.

IRISH HAND-LOOM WEAVERS.

Efforts are being made by the Hand-loom Weavers' Society, of Ireland, to secure the adoption of measures calculated to prolong the life of the slowly dying hand-weaving industry in the Emerald Isle. A deputation recently waited upon the Countess of Aberdeen soliciting her support for the proposal to make it compulsory for manufacturers to weave the words, "Irish hand-woven linen damask," into each end of tablecloths and napkins of all hand-woven linen damask. It is pointed out, however, by the Irish Textile Journal that this measure, even if adopted, would not have the effect of materially lengthening the life of the hand-loom. At the present time there are not more than a thousand weavers actually at work, and the majority of these are old. As they are removed by death, their places will not be taken by others, since the industry is not one which will prove attractive to the younger generation, and in the natural course of events, it must be at best, but a matter of a short time until the hand-weaving industry will have been entirely superseded by the power looms.

CUTTING OUT CHEAP LINES.

The tendency towards a better class of trade in men's wear is a feature of interest, and a significant fact in this connection is the attitude of the wholesalers. One firm informed The Review that it had practically decided to discontinue carrying certain lines of the cheaper goods—lines in which they did $15,000 worth of business last year—because, while there was a demand in certain quarters for them, the profits were so small that it was not thought desirable to handle the business on the margin of profit available.

The retailers, too, are just as anxious to get away from the low-priced goods, and the majority of them are gradually working towards a better class of trade, for which, of course, there is an increasing friendliness among the desirable store patrons.

EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT.

It is stated upon what is considered good authority that, following the new year another move looking to shorter hours for salespeople will be made by the T. Eaton Co., and that after the holidays the store will in all probability close on Saturday afternoon during the whole year, instead of as at present, only during the Summer months.

One of the ambitions of the late Timothy Eaton was to shorten the hours of business in his store and at the time that the 5 o'clock closing was inaugurated he intimated that the Saturday half-holiday would be the next step in the shorter hour policy.

HANDSOME CURTAIN CATALOGUE.

In January Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. will place in the hands of the trade a handsome curtain catalogue. In addition to a splendid variety of lace curtains, there will be found in it illustrations of ruffled bobbinet curtains, lace door panels, lace bed spreads and bobbinet laces, insertions and lace motifs in great variety. The range is steadily being enlarged and improved.

The mail order department of this firm's business is becoming a prominent feature.

A huge water tank at the Davenport Road factory collapsed recently and caused considerable damage, but the prompt execution of orders has not been interfered with.

A GOOD NOTION WINDOW.

The notion window, illustrated on another page of this issue, contains several good suggestions. The background in the window was green satin, pleated six feet high. A good substitute would be green, black, or brown felt. It is two yards wide, and if stretched across the back of window perfectly smooth would look even better than the pleated effect, besides saving half the time. A six-inch board covered smoothly in white material (canton flannel for instance), is run across the back, supported by four uprights about one inch by three. Four oval-shaped frames (substitute a diamond shape) are covered in white, on which cards of hooks and eyes are arranged. If papers of pins were opened out their full length and hung between the ovals across the board it would heighten the effect. Three steps, ten inches high, one above the other, are used, on which the different lines are promiscuously arranged. The same design could be used for a window half this size. The foregoing offers a simple idea for a notion trim. Try a few of these notion windows during the next few months and test the idea, as there is no doubt a big return is assured, not only to the notion department direct, but indirectly to other departments.

NECKWEAR COMPANY'S LOSS.

The Canadian Neckwear Co., Scott Street, Toronto, suffered a $15,000 loss by fire on November 26. The fire originated in the silk storeroom, and all the material in the room was destroyed. This included not only neckwear material, but that for the manufacture of fancy vests, which was a branch of the company's business.

About seventy-five hands were employed, but they will be out of work only temporarily, since the firm will as soon as possible resume operations.

WESTERN MERCHANT DEAD.

Edmund Penner, one of the pioneer merchants of Manitoba, is dead. Deceased came to Canada from Russia, with the first Mennonite colony in 1870, and during the early pioneer years freighted on the Red River. He later moved to Grilno, where he entered into mercantile pursuits, and accumulated a fortune. He was a loser to the extent of $150,000 by the absconding clerks last year, but in spite of his disaster he died a wealthy man.

A TRAVELERS' TOWN.

The press of Peterborough points with pride to the fact that there are living in that city 111 commercial travelers, and sees in this an evidence of the centralization of business there. Several of the travelers making their homes there represent dry goods firms with warehouses in Toronto and Montreal.

NEW FUR STORE PREMISES.

Dechene & Poulin, furriers, Quebec city, have recently removed into new and larger premises, made necessary by the growth of their business. The new building is a handsome four-storey structure, with a frontage of 32 feet on St. Joseph street, and 54 feet on St. Francois street, and has a depth of 125 feet. This firm was formin 1900, though Mr. Dechene had been in business since 1875.

Hints to Buyers

From information supplied to Sellers, but for which the Editors of THE REVIEW do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

New Electric Signs.

Clatworthy & Son, 38-40 Adelaide St. west, will place on the market at the first of the year a new electric sign device which will appeal to the trade as a most effective window illumination. Hitherto the electric signs have done duty outside the store, and, by their multiplication, their individual value is largely discounted. By the new signs which this firm will put out to the trade, however, a distinctive individuality will be given each window and they will be of such a nature as to compel attention to the window and to its contents, a feature which will appeal to the drygoodsmen and furnishers. The letters will be of crystal, and will be arranged so that there will be a maximum of brilliancy with a minimum expenditure of electric current. The letters, which will be about 4 inches deep, will be interchangeable, making possible a variety of catchy mottos, appropriate to the trade which it is designed to attract. These signs, which were invented and patented by a St. Catharines man will be sold at a moderate price, and will be ready right after the new year. This is but one of the many lines of store fixtures manufactured by Clatworthy & Son, silent salesmen being included among the staple lines.

Greenshields Western Ltd., Winnipeg

Greenshields Western have the best assorted stock of Spring goods in the history of the firm, and that is saying a great deal. Travelers are now on the road with Spring samples and the goods are arriving in large quantities for shipment later.

Greenshields Western have been particularly fortunate in their purchases of staple cottons. During the last year prices have been advanced from ten to fifty per cent. by the mills and all branches of the trade have been much interested in this advance in values. Owing to some lucky purchases a year ago Greenshields Western are now receiving large shipments of staple cottons which they are able to offer to their customers in most cases at the prices obtaining before the advance. They advise their customers to order these lines early, since, when the present stock is exhausted it will be impossible to buy more except at the advanced prices. They have a splendid assortment now and are able to offer their customers a particularly attractive bargain. They have 1,500 pieces of job ginghams which they are offering at 20 per cent. less than the current prices. These are bargains which should interest the trade in a year when general advances are being made in these lines.

Some attractive offerings in Christmas goods are ready for immediate shipment and Greenshields Western direct particular attention to their advertisement on page 5 of this issue.

I. Mishkin & Co.

A progressive move on the part of I. Mishkin & Co., waist manufacturers, Montreal, is the introduction of an especially appropriate fancy box for Christmas trade. Waists are large sellers at the holiday period and these special boxes, with a timely greeting on the outside will be appreciated by the trade. All holiday orders will be packed in these boxes, and should be a decided aid to the waist department. The boxes are trimmed with fancy lace and have the many little details which make for completeness in this respect. Early ordering is advised.

E .Bellinger.

E. Bellinger, 101 Bay street, Toronto, has his samples all ready for Spring and Summer. His range of embroideries, trimmings and woolen knitted goods is much better than ever. Beautiful silk trimmings form a particularly attractive feature of his lines.

John Macdonald Company.

Every retailer knows how difficult it is nowadays to purchase merchandise for what it purports to be—how seldom the quality is as represented. The August apple has seldom the flavor and luscious taste of the old-time "Harvest apple." The same disappointing experience runs throughout all branches of trade, with here and there a bright spot to cheer, like the oasis in the desert.

In the arena of dry goods the oasis may be found in the great assorting house of the Dominion, of John Macdonald & Co., Limited. Here is where retailers from all over the country have been accustomed for over fifty-eight years to sorting up from the largest stocks for each season, after purchasing their main supplies from travelers; and they need not be told that in each department are to be found this season's special values, many lines selling at reduced prices, suitable for the Christmas trade. One is reminded by this firm's announcement on the last page of this issue that they have now a special clearing sale of dress goods in fine tweed effects at a large reduction off regular prices. This old-established house may always be relied upon, and when they offer a bargain, it is a bargain. These dress goods are all new and fashionable, just what is required for the present season; but, anticipating a big advance for these lines, the company laid in a much larger stock than usual, and are taking this method of clearing it. It is probably well known that John Macdonald & Co., Limited, are wholesale agents in Canada for the celebrated Crum's Prints, which, for superiority of cloth, fastness in color, beauty in finish, variety of patterns and durability of wear, are perhaps unequalled. The manufacturers of these goods will not depreciate their value by reducing the width or altering them in any way; neither will they use cheaper dyes so as to reduce the price.

As the years pass, John Macdonald & Co. pay closer attention, if possible, to the world's markets in their lines and, having expert buyers, well equipped to take advantage of every favorable wind that blows, are able to give their army of customers throughout the Dominion the best possible values. Their travelers are now on the road with Spring samples, showing a larger range and better values than ever, and merchants visiting Toronto are cordially invited to inspect their large warehouses on Wellington street, and make their own comparisons. Such an inspection will convince the most skeptical that John Macdonald & Co. leave no stone unturned to serve the trade, and that it is without doubt the place to buy all kinds of dry goods to the best advantage. Those unable to make a personal visit should write for samples and terms.

The W. R. Brock Co., Ltd., Toronto.

For Christmas and the holiday season this company offers to the trade suitable and useful articles for presentation purposes. The following legitimate dry goods offer some suggestions: Ladies silk umbrellas in individual boxes with silk cover and tassel; handsome gold or silver handles, space being left for monogram; neck frills, in fancy Christmas boxes containing half a dozen assorted frills.; novelties from New York in ladies' celluloid back and side combs, filagree patterns and rhinestone mountings, special value to retail at 25c.

They have imported a large range of ladies' and gents' handkerchiefs for the Christmas trade, appropriately boxed. There is nothing that makes a more acceptable Christmas gift. A nice range of initial handkerchiefs, put up in half-dozen fancy boxes, offers a good choice. They are just the thing for a Christmas gift. This house also shows every handkerchief novelty in the line of silk, linen or cambric. A line of Japanese silk handkerchiefs, new and effective, is shown to retail at 25c.

Wool goods make suitable gifts during the cold weather, and Brock's carry a large range of these in squares, fascinators, mufflers and motor scarfs.

In fancy wool goods no house in the trade carries a larger assortment than Brock's, Toronto. Honeycomb and fancy knit wool shawls, toques, polka jackets, infantees, bootees, gaiters, etc., a new idea in the toque line, tok-scarf, being a combination of toque and scarf, which is just the thing for young ladies for skating and tobogganing.

White bearskin goods for youngsters are all the rage. Brock's can supply this class of goods in a large assortment of coats, tams, toques, hoods, minerva sets, muffs, mitts, etc. See Brock's wool mitts, single or double, to retail at 25 cents.

The gents' furnishing department have just opened for the Christmas trade a very extensive range of men's neckwear in new designs and colorings, also men's silk mufflers in all the popular prices, both square and shaped. Men's ties and braces, put up in fancy individual boxes, are good lines for the retailer to have at this time of the year.

They are also showing a complete range of smoking jackets, dressing gowns and fancy knitted vests, all specially bought for the Christmas trade. Merchants requiring sorting-up in men's and boys' underwear during December will find that this department has made special provision to be able to supply their needs.

This company would like to draw the attention of the trade to the fact that they have in stock now ready for shipment a full line of silk waists for the Christmas trade, and can ship them out at a moment's notice. The line consists of Japanese silks, taffettas, and lace waists, etc., running in price from $2 to $12 each, the latter French goods, which are confined to them for this country and are the creations of the most exclusive waist house in Paris. They are also showing a full line of children's cashmere coats pellises and long capes, just the goods for Christmas selling.

They would especially draw the attention of the trade to the following lines: 336 black silk skirt, with under-flounce, at $3.75; E316 silk waist, white embroidery Japanese, at $2.75; 323 sateen skirt, with under-flounce, $9. Job wrappers, regular $9 and $15, good for $6.75 and $9 per dozen, assorted sizes and colors. Jobs in colored wrapperette and lustre waists, a full stock and jobs in overskirts, all Her Ladyship brand of garments.

Greenshields, Limited, Montreal.

In every department of Greenshields Limited, Montreal, last month, stock-taking was the order of the day. This served to weed out the slow-selling lines which were sold as jobs. Some of the departments, however, had fewer jobs than for many years past, while in other departments there were absolutely no jobs to be had.

In the carpet and house furnishing department new goods are arriving every day, and almost as quickly are being shipped out. In this department they report a good Spring trade so far, notwithstanding the tight money situation. The extensive range of carpets, curtains, squares of all descriptions linoleums, mattings, crettones and art muslins carried by this firm is equal to anything of the kind on the market. Further, they embrace all the latest designs and colorings. Merchants would do well to inspect this stock on which the prices will be found to be right.

At the time of writing, having just finished stock-taking, Greenshields' ready-to-wear department is very busy shipping out lines suitable for the Christmas trade, orders, for which, up to the present, greatly exceed those of other seasons. They also find that the merchants throughout the country are paying greater attention to the January whitewear sale than in former years. This is evidenced by the big shipments of these lines which are being sent out by this firm. The demand for all lines of ready-to-wear goods is very strong, merchants fully realizing that it is one of the most profitable and satisfactory departments in the trade.

This firm is showing for Fall, 1908, one of the most complete ranges of furs that has ever been presented to the trade in Canada. The success which this department has met with in the past convinces them that their lines are right. They are showing many exclusive goods in the most fashionable furs controlled by them in Canada, at prices that will interest buyers. A complete range will be in the hands of their travelers by the first of the year.

W. R. Brock Co., Ltd., Montreal.

Just about this season of the year, owing to the advance in woolen fabrics, merchants are experiencing some difficulty in securing a satisfactory cloth for ladies' and children's coats at a popular price.

The Brock Company were fortunate enough to get their order in before the advance and this enables them to show several lines at the old figures. One of the most interesting is a 54-in. wool cheviot which can be retailed at 75 cents and as the cloth is now worth more than 50 cents at the mill it can readily be seen that at this price it is a bargain. The supply, however, is limited and it would be desirable for those who contemplate ordering to act at once. Samples may be had on application.

The fancy goods department has just passed into stock a nice assortment of Japanese drawn work. A beautiful variety of patterns is shown and at the prices quoted should prove rapid sellers.

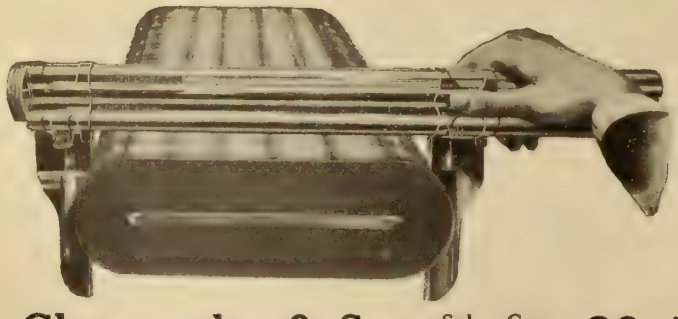
The company are offering a $40 assortment which should prove interesting to merchants in small towns. The lot contains one piece of each pattern and size carried and the figure of $40 gives a reduction on the regular price of something like 20 per cent. Write for one of these lots for Xmas trade as the goods are now in stock and shipment can be made immediately on receipt of order.

Dominion Thread in the West.

The Andrew H. McDowell Company, Incorporated, of Toronto and Montreal, have, for some time, been on the lookout for a more convenient distributing point in the West for their goods. They have now arranged for a local office at 63 Albert St. and will be represented hereafter by the Western Commission Company, which is, in turn, composed of the Western representatives of the firm of Messrs. John Knox & Company. The Andrew H. McDowell Company are general textile commission merchants, one of their specialties being "Dominion Threads," of which they are sole selling agents. "Dominion Threads" are products of the only independent thread mill in Canada, and are steadily winning their way into the good graces of progressive dealers.

Debenhams, Ltd. (Canada) Toronto.

The demand in black goods is distinctly for high class fancies, and Debenhams are showing a large range in this class, which are of such style and value that they are sure of a ready sale. The range is more varied and extensive than usual, and is particularly strong in moderately priced goods.



In Venetian cloths, which promise well for Spring, buyers are recommended to see CH 261, CH 301, CH 341. These are splendid value, particularly CH 261. This cloth last season had a slight admixture of cotton, but for the coming Spring it is being run in pure wool. This enables the firm to include shades in the range that it was impossible to obtain in the old cloth. As new colors come to the front they will be sampled in these Venetians, and new color samples will be added at an early date.

Taffeta voiles will be wanted, and Debenhams are showing two good numbers in CH421 and CH 441. These are shown in a big range of colors, and as they are of French manufacture should find a ready sale.

Among plain cloths mention should be made of Eolionne CH 581 and Foule CH481. These fabrics are run in a big range of shades, and are splendid value at the price.

In the fancy collection this firm is showing several ranges of mohair effects, for which there seems to be a good feeling. Some of the styles and colors are exceptionally smart. Grey stripes and checks are a feature and suiting effects are well represented.
